Confronting HIV/AIDS: The Development Perspective

ALEX DE WAAL

Why the HIV/AIDS Pandemic is a Structural Threat to Africa's Governance and Economic Development.....6

A peculiar feature of HIV/AIDS is that it contributes to unusually high levels of personal and economic stress, setting in motion processes of structural transformation. Seen as a threat to government power and national security, the epidemic calls for an agenda of restoring Africa to a progressive development path.

ANDREW NATSIOS

HIV/AIDS and Development: The U.S. Response An Interview with the USAID Administrator.....25

What has USAID done to combat HIV/AIDS? Andrew Natsios examines the pressures that drove him to change USAID policies on the use of antiretroviral medications in Africa, discusses the global nature of the disease, and highlights the relationship between the War on Terror and the epidemic.

International Law under Fire

CARSTEN STAHN

Terrorist Acts as "Armed Attack": The Right to Self-Defense, Article 51(1/2) of the UN Charter, and International Terrorism.....35

The U.S. administration's recent expansive interpretation of the right to self-defense under Article 51 of the UN Charter requires a concurrent reassessment of the legal concepts of necessity and proportionality in the context of terror.

GABOR RONA

Interesting Times for International Humanitarian Law: Challenges from the "War on Terror" .....55

International humanitarian law is fine—as long as it is appreciated for what it is rather than criticized for what it is not. Legal advisor to the International Committee of the Red Cross probes the idea of whether humanitarian law is applicable to the War on Terror and argues that the values of human security and the rule of law enshrined in the Geneva Conventions should be upheld.

MICHAEL GLENNON

Self-Determination and Cultural Diversity.....75

How does a "right" to self-determination fare next to the state practice of intervention? If self-determination leads to cultural homogeneity, does it also lead to oppression?

ENVER HASANI

Uti Possidetis Juris: From Rome to Kosovo* .....85

The legal principle of uti possidetis juris defines national borders within Africa and Latin America and still informs the conceptual thinking on international frontiers today. When applied to Kosovo, however, it has led to disastrous results.

U.S.: Bully or Benefactor?

GARETH EVANS

The U.S. Versus The World?

How American Power Seems to the Rest of Us .....99

"Just about everything the U.S. does—or chooses not to do—makes an enormous difference to everyone else," says the former Foreign Minister of Australia and current president of the International Crisis Group. If the U.S. is to enjoy its power, it might want to make friends, rather than enemies, with other nations.

JOSEF BRAML

Rule of Law or Dictates by Fear: A German Perspective

on American Civil Liberties in the War Against Terrorism .....115

The post-9/11 contest between national security and civil liberties in the U.S. has so far favored the former, raising concerns both in America and abroad.

JENNIFER WINDSOR

Democracy and Development:

The Evolution of U.S. Foreign Assistance Policy .....141

Until recently, U.S. foreign assistance to developing countries was based on the belief that democratization could be deferred until development objectives had been achieved. According to the executive director of Freedom House, that belief is changing.

Global Pressure Points

SUNG-YOON LEE

Nuclear Diplomacy vis-à-vis the DPRK: A Dead-End Street .....151

The nature of the North Korean regime and the immeasurable value of nuclear weapons to Pyongyang make any talks with Kim Jong Il futile. Rather than waste time, the U.S. should persuade South Korea and China to put more pressure on the North Korean government.

SVANTE CORNELL

The War Against Terrorism and the Conflict in Chechnya:

A Case for Distinction .....167

Islamic radicalism stands as a result, not a cause, of Moscow's war in Chechnya. The current Russian assault against the Chechen people, conveniently dubbed an "anti-terrorist" operation, will only breed more chaos and extremism.

MIRIAM LANSKOY

Chechnya's Internal Fragmentation, 1996 – 1999 .....185

Independence, the cherished dream of the Chechen resistance movement, was briefly won in 1996, but turned into a cruel and disappointing experiment. Unwilling to challenge the radicals on one side, and alienated by the Kremlin on the other, Chechen national leaders have been forced to watch the renewed carnage from the sidelines.

DAVID S. SORENSON

The Dynamics of Political Dissent in Egypt.....207

Successive Egyptian presidents have tolerated a limited amount of public criticism, but for the most part considered it to be “dissent” rather than loyal opposition. Professor David Sorenson examines different forms of Egyptian “dissent” and argues that its official interpretations have allowed the government to crush violent Islamist opponents and attack liberal adversaries.

DANIEL LANGENKAMP

The Victory of Expediency

Afghan Refugees and Pakistan in the 1990s .....229

An examination of the policies implemented by the government of Pakistan and the international community towards Afghan refugees demonstrate that the international refugee regime is both highly politicized and offers few protections to asylum seekers in, or from, non-strategic peripheral states.

Issues and Policy

HECTOR CORREA

A Game Theoretic Analysis of Democracy, Tyranny, and Terrorism .....255

The application of game theory to interactions between a government and a minority group within society reveals that stable majority/minority divisions lead to violence. However, where majority/minority divisions are flexible, democratic compromise may be possible.

ALPHONSE F. LA PORTA

Rationalization of NATO Forces in the Balkans .....271

Not willing to be seen as an occupier in the Balkans, NATO forces have tried to regroup while emphasizing local capacity and reforming their own mandate.

MIKE RUETTIGERS

Business Continuity for Global Enterprises:

The Fletcher Forum of World Affairs aims to provide a broad, interdisciplinary platform for ideas and opinions in international affairs. While we do not expect readers to agree with all of the opinions expressed in these pages, we do hope that readers expect, and value, the publication of divergent and often conflicting viewpoints. This diversity stands behind the very definition of a “forum,” i.e., a public meeting place for open discussion. While the editorial board is responsible for the selection of articles, the opinions expressed here are solely those of authors and do not reflect in any way the opinions of The Fletcher Forum or The Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy.

Professor Robert Hudec

(1935-2003)

This past spring, the Fletcher community lost a brilliant teacher, accomplished economist, and close friend. Professor Robert Hudec taught at The Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy from 2000 to 2003 and was one of the founding fathers of the study of international trade law. He left his mark on the international community as a leading scholar of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and an influential analyst of the World Trade Organization. Professor Hudec was a mentor to many of us at The Fletcher School, and he will be deeply missed.

Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan

(1927-2003)

The entire Tufts community suffered a deep loss with the recent passing of Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan, an alumnus of both Tufts University and The Fletcher School, and one of the brightest stars on the American political horizon in the twentieth century. Moynihan served as a U.S. senator from New York for 24 years and was a senior official in four administrations, including postings as the U.S. ambassador to India and the United Nations. Senator Moynihan dedicated his life to improving social welfare in America; his passion and wit will be deeply missed.

The staff of The Fletcher Forum of World Affairs would like to express our personal thanks to Professor Hudec and Senator Moynihan for all they have done to advance the study of international affairs and the practice and art of diplomacy.
