Thirteen hundred contributors have donated funds to the campaign to defeat Proposition 5 -- the smoking prohibitions measure -- Californians for Common Sense reported today.

Contributions to the campaign from November of last year through September 23 of this year total $3,081,065 the campaign organization declared in its fiscal report prepared for filing with Secretary of State March Fong Eu.

Expenditures during this period total $2,928,307, the campaign report said. This includes substantial pre-payments for future advertising and refundable deposits for telephones and other campaign services.

Major donors to the campaign include five tobacco companies:

$70,000
Brown & Williamson, $470,000; Liggett & Meyers, $13,025; Lorillard, 584,545
$384,548; Philip Morris, 1,380,000 $785,000; and R. J. Reynolds, 1,669,785.51 $1,169,786.

More than 1,230 of the campaign contributions came from Californians with no connection with the manufacture or sale of tobacco products.
