

DARKNESS DENIED

BY Richard Sean Gross

Grass grows all night under prison's perpetual light, no shadows can hide from sight.

Bright white light bounces off razor wire banishing night beyond the berm.

Unpainted concrete shines white at night under the tall poles that illuminate all corners.

Seventy foot poles positioned to act as sentinals denying darkness any foothold on the property.

No night-time here nor anyplace near. Unceasing light upon all of Phoenix except for its construction budget.
