

Date for Angelou lecture revised

by PETE SANBORN
Daily Editorial Board

Maya Angelou's speech has been rescheduled for Monday, April 28, the last day of classes, said Lecture Series co-chair Traci Craig yesterday. The performance will be held at the Somerville Theatre at 7 p.m. All tickets from the original date will be honored.

"She was really upset that she couldn't come, and was quite frustrated with the Logan Airport situation," Craig said. "That frustration goes without saying for everyone involved in this event."

Students unable to attend the rescheduled performance will have the opportunity to sell back their tickets between 3 p.m. and 7 p.m. on April 9 in Room 205 of the Campus Center, Craig said.

Explaining that the event was sold-out, Craig said the only tickets that will be sold for the new date will be returned tickets.

She added that Lecture Series will sell the returned tickets on April 9, at the same time and location as the ticket buy-backs.

"There were no problems getting the Somerville Theatre," Craig said. "We were really lucky. They really wanted this to happen too, which says a lot about the community."

TUTV initiates broadcasting in downhill dorms

by JEFFREY CARLON
Senior Staff Writer

Tufts University Television (TUTV) is currently broadcasting on channel 64 in downhill residence halls, said Howard Woolf, the administrative advisor to TUTV and associate director of the Experimental College.

"Over break we had it going both uphill and downhill, but there were a couple of systems problems," he said. "Hopefully, if it is not fixed now, it will be soon."

TUTV is currently undergoing a large transition from what was once just a production studio to a full fledged television station. Broadcasting on campus, the station has plans for new programming and equipment, Woolf said.

Saying that four proposals are currently in the works for new TUTV television shows, Woolf said the programs include "two comedy shows, a panel on the future of children in the media, and a magazine show that we are trying to put together."

Describing the comedy shows, station manager Dave Perry said, "We currently have two separate comedy shows in production. The first is a comedy variety show called Woonsocket." He said the show is being produced by sophomores Alex Kaplan, Chris Pape, Dave Lendler, and Tim Golden.

"Woonsocket is already being videotaped and it will be on the air in a few weeks. Our other show, being produced by two seniors, Esteban Gergely and Thomas Cutler, will take a satirical look at the Tufts community. It will be something like a 'comedy-documentary,'" Perry said.

Woolf said TUTV recently taped the Tufts NCAA basketball games and has been showing them on channel 64. He added that an idea has been proposed for "fireside chats" with University president John DiBiaggio, where the station would broadcast an interview or press conference between DiBiaggio and members of the media.

Most of TUTV's specialized programming will air during the evening, and the day-time programming will mostly include repeat shows, Woolf said.

Discussing the station's plans for new programming, Woolf said TUTV aims to have one-third of its work involve classes at Tufts, such as students taping scenes from Shakespeare for an English class, and two-thirds of its work devoted to public information.

TUTV is currently working on creating a videotech scroll to display important information to the Tufts community, Woolf said. He added that the station is in the preliminary stages of working out a deal with the local radio station WMFO to provide a radio broadcast while this information is being scrolled.

In addition to the recent funding received from the Office of the Presidents, Woolf said that TUTV plans to raise $50,000 to $75,000 over the next few years in order to fully replace the station's old equipment.

TUTV will specifically be looking to alumni who were involved with Tufts television while at the university. Woolf said, "We have enough equipment camera-wise," but that there is a need to upgrade

TUTV's current studio space.

Discussing the money received earlier in the academic year, Perry said, "None of this would have been possible without the tremendous support that we have received from the President, the Provost, and the Senate."

Woolf said the station is experimenting this semester, but added, "Over the summer we will be trying to make the quality as good as possible; it should by the fall look like any other cable channel."

Echoing Woolf, Perry said, "This semester is being utilized as an experimental period. We have purchased many new pieces of editing and production equipment, and we are using this semester to become experts on all of it. Our official 'launch' will not be until next semester."

'Beyond Big Bird' to explore children's TV, V-chip

by KAREN EPSTEIN
Daily Editorial Board

In response to criticism by child experts and legislators, the television industry has begun an attempt within the past year at stricter regulation of children's programming.

Recent legislation, spearheaded by US Rep. Ed Markey (D-Mass.), includes the V-chip, which will allow parents to selectively block out violent programming, a new television ratings system, and an agreement by television broadcasters to air at least three hours a week of educational programs on television.

On Monday, April 7, Markey will come to Tufts to join a panel of leading experts from several fields to discuss these new developments in children's television programming.

The panel, entitled, "Beyond Big Bird: The Future of Children's Television," will feature Markey, along with Peggy Charren, founder of Action for Children's Television (ACT) and longtime advocate for quality children's programming; Amy B. Jordan, senior research investigator of the Annenberg Public Policy Center at the University of Pennsylvania; Donald Wertlieb, associate professor of child development at Tufts University; and Elizabeth Cheng, director of programming for WCVB-TV (Boston's ABC affiliate), and an award-winning producer of children's programs. The panel will be held in the Coolidge Room of Ballou Hall from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m.

The event, co-sponsored by the Eliot-Pearson Department of Child Development, the Communications and Media Studies Program (CMS), and the Experimental College, is meant to "make people more informed and aware of the exciting things happening in children's television," said professor Julie Dobrow, coordinator of children and media initiatives. "We are very fortunate to be able to sponsor this panel," Dobrow said.

In 1990, Markey authored the Children's Television Act (CTA), which required that broadcasters air more educational programming for kids. Child experts, however, were dismayed at television broadcasters' interpretation of the act. One problem, critics cited, was that programming meant for children was placed in undesirable time slots.

Additionally, according to Charren, the broadcaster's version of what was educational programming was often far-fetched. "They said things like The Jetsons taught kids about life in the 21st century," she said.

Recently, television broadcasters and the FCC agreed to air at least three hours a week of educational programs for children between 7 a.m. and 10 p.m., an attempt to fulfill the goals of the CTA. Joe Dalton, a spokesman for Markey, said that this minimum of three hours is an "obligation now [broadcasters] have in exchange for the retention of broadcast licenses."

The condition of American democracy

From the floor of the Tufts Community Union to Capitol Hill, the debate rages over what certain groups are entitled to, what rights individuals have, and what, in the end, are the limits of democracy.

EPIIC (Education for Public Inquiry and International Citizenship) has organized a series of panels confronting this debate. In addition to an already distinguished panel of scholars, former Democratic US presidential candidate Michael Dukakis and Sidney Verba, a renowned Harvard professor, will comment upon the present condition of American democracy. They will focus on the state of civil society in America and how politics have been transformed in recent years. This panel discussion, entitled "Democracy in Crisis?" will take place on Saturday at 9:15 a.m. in Cabot Auditorium.

On Sunday, EPIIC will host Richard Nuccio, the former Senior Advisor on Latin America for the State Department, who will elaborate on his experiences in the recent scandals involving the CIA. That organization is alleged to have hired a Guatemalan military official who is responsible for the deaths of an American and a Guatemalan rebel leader. This incident raises questions which will be discussed at the Sunday panel: How is the CIA accountable to American citizens? And to what degree must secrecy be tolerated in US foreign policy operations?

Nuccio, as well as Thomas Blanton, executive director of the National Security Archives, and Terrell Arnold, the former Deputy Director of Counterterrorism for the State Department, will speak extensively on the relationship between "Secrecy, Democracy, and US Foreign Policy" at 1 p.m. on Sunday, also in Cabot Auditorium.

Student ID cards are getting smarter

College Press Exchange

It used to be student ID cards were just that: identification cards. But nowadays, "smart" cards offer long-distance calling features, give access to snack and laundry machines, and store class schedules, grades and other personal information.

As universities confront the daunting reality of rising costs, they are scrambling for ways to increase revenue. One popular method is creating multipurpose cards that combine banking services with traditional university necessities.

Here's how it works: By signing a deal with one particular bank where students are urged to open their accounts, universities reap the monetary benefits offered by the highest bidder. This is in addition to profits generated through financial aid accounts, calling card access and merchant partnerships.

Although school say these deals provide students convenience, some students say they fear schools are taking advantage of their consumerism.

"FSU [Florida State University], along with Northwestern, has pioneered the campus card system," said Robert Huber of Robert Huber Associates, a Phoenix consulting firm that helps colleges design and implement campus card systems. "But it hasn't been a raving success there." Students at Northwestern report general satisfaction with the WildCARD, according to a March 1996 survey, conducted by the WildCARD office.

But students at FSU, located in Tallahassee, were so displeased with the card that it became a target for a student organization called the War Department for the Defense of Student Rights.

"We're upset because the administration is using our Social Security numbers as identification and releasing our numbers to private companies, like MCI and Suntrust Bank, so that they have access to personal information about us," said Rich Templin, one of the group's top officials. "They know when we come in and when we leave our dorms and what we buy. That's a little too 'Big Brother' for us." The FSU card was implemented in the fall of 1991 and has expanded rapidly over the past six years, adding new features like the "smart card" chip.

Bill Norwood, executive director of Florida State's Card Application Technology Center said that Florida State has switched its association with Tallahassee National Bank to Suntrust, seeing a jump in membership by 9,000 students.

Ling Chai not welcome

To the Editor:

We, the Chinese Scholars and Students Association (CSSA), are disappointed by EPIIC's invitation to the controversial figure, Ling Chai, one of the leaders of the 1989 students protests in Tiananmen Square, China.

We don't welcome Ling Chai based on the following considerations:

We doubt she can bring the truth to the Tufts. In 1989, western journalists popularized an interview with Ling Chai about the June 4 incident in Tiananmen Square. However, that interview turned out to be staged prior to June 4. After that, she lost her credibility among the students inside China, as well as with overseas Chinese scholars and students, including those in America. She darkened the spirit of democracy, and misused our trust.

We doubt she can objectively introduce and evaluate the current achievements of democracy development in China. Today, more and more people begin to realize that the democracy is a term closely interlinked with economics. While China is growing as the third economic power in the world, it has made great progress in democracy and human rights. We wonder, after she has been living in the US and engaged in defaming the Chinese government for so many years, whether or not she knows today's China?

We sincerely hope that EPIIC and other organizations at Tufts can bring us speakers who know today's China and can objectively introduce it to Tufts, rather than those dissidents who only know yesterday's China and only create more misunderstanding.

Neither rain nor snow, nor dark of night

To the Editor:

Thanks and great job to The Tufts Daily. I was shocked to see an issue of the Daily yesterday morning. While the University offices were closed on Tuesday due to the "Blizzard of '97," the Daily obviously wasn't. I am sure that most of the staff (volunteer workers) would have preferred to spend the afternoon sledding and snowballing, but didn't, and instead worked to provide the rest of us with a newspaper. That's incredible. Thanks.

Markey is dissatisfied with ratings system

discussed her views on what meets the criteria of educational programming. She said this type of television "gives to kids something they need to grow up healthy-wise in a democracy."

Charren said positive educational programming can give children a love of books and writing, as well as an understanding of what democracy is all about. Educational programming, she said, is "anything that gives kids some base for moving onto some kind of learning."

Parents, Charren said, will know good educational programming when they see it. "It's the kind of programming they'd be happy having their kids sit on the couch in front of," she said.

Many of the programs on Public Broadcasting, Charren said, are designed to educate. "Most," she said, "are absolutely delicious." Some PBS shows she described as educational are Mr. Rogers' Neighborhood, Sesame Street, Magic Schoolbus, Bill Nye Science Guy and Reading Rainbow.

Charren, who graduated from Connecticut College with a degree in English in 1949, began ACT in 1968. Although she disbanded ACT in 1992, she has remained active in her work to improve children's television. In 1995, she received the Presidential Medal of Freedom for her dedication to this field.

As part of the sweeping Telecommunications Act of 1996, all television sets will be required by law to be equipped with a V-chip by 1998. Markey authored this amendment to the telecommunications bill.

In preparation for the V-chip, on Jan. 1, the television industry, introduced an age-based content ratings system. Broadcast and cable networks have been displaying these six icons, such as TV-PG (parental guidance) and TV-14 (parents strongly cautioned) for non-news and non-sports programming. Many critics, including Charren and Markey, however, are displeased with this new age-based system.

Critics feel that a television ratings system should be content-based, giving parents a description of violence, sex, and adult language in a particular program. Dalton, speaking on behalf of Markey, said that "the congressman and a number of child advocates have argued that a content description should be added [to the ratings]."

The FCC, Dalton said, is holding a public comment period on the ratings system until April 8, at which time Markey will be "submitting a letter... with his dissatisfaction."

Another panelist, Donald Wertlieb, an associate professor of Child Development, also feels that a content-based rating system is necessary. "Parents need more than the rating system they're being offered in order to make informed decisions," Wertlieb said.

Charren told the Daily that, rather than a V-chip, she would like to see the technology more as what she calls a "zap-chip." She said this system would allow for different types of "zap charts," such as for the PTA and different religious groups.

"Parents would find this easier to understand," Charren said.

You can have the whole world at your finger-tips!
 (Well, maybe not the whole world, and even if you did have the whole world, there probably wouldn't be cut-out figures around it.)

Hubby, and despite the fact that you hate aquatic life you eat Phish Food. Face it, you're a Ben & Jerry's fiend. It's okay. While the fat content of the ice cream will do nothing for your arteries, Ben & Jerry's: The Inside Scoop, the story of how the Ben & Jerry's company came to be, will warm your heart. Written by former CEO of Ben & Jerry's, Fred "Chico" Lager, the book is three books in one—one about a friendship, one about building a company, and one about a case study of a successful business.

Lager dedicates the first few chapters to the childhood of the company's founders on New York's Long Island.

"Ben Cohen and Jerry Greenfield were the two slowest, chubbiest kids in their seventh-grade gym class..." writes Lager on page one.

The two forged a friendship on their mutual dislike for running and passion for eating, though Ben and Jerry were and are as different as chocolate and vanilla. Ben was the rebel and the idealist who has kept his seventh-grade smart mouth and pot belly, while Jerry grew into his tummy and excelled at school.

Though Lager didn't meet the two ice cream makers until their business was well underway, he bares all he can find about them. He injects as much humor and mockery of his two friends, one of whom (Ben) "split his pants on Jerry knew about ice cream making came from a five dollar correspondence course, for which they split the cost. The two built their first scoop shop on a wing, a prayer, and a loan. They had to sleep on freezers and eat customer leftovers just to survive. A far cry from the salary and luxuries they now enjoy from their multi-million dollar publically traded company.

Throughout the book, Ben clearly emerges as the driving force behind the company. He was the wizard behind many of the flavors and the strongest proponent for more "chunkage" in the ice cream. His commitment to helping the community by creating a socially conscious company has not only differentiated Ben and Jerry from their competitors, but has also created a model for other businesses. Despite the difficulty Lager had in dealing with Ben's creative whims and erratic moods, he gives credit to Ben's vision and innovation.

Though the second half of the book focuses more on the business aspects, the friendship between Ben and Jerry remains a constant issue. Jerry's ability to mediate between Ben and the rest of the company captures the special bond between the two men. Twenty years, several million dollars, and many employees later, Ben and Jerry are still close friends.

Billed as a business chronicle, the book has a tremendous amount of economic jargon and financial analysis. While this distracts from the friendship and the rags to riches aspect, it's the most painless, amusing business book you could hope to find. Creating shareholders, breaking into new markets, and securing market share miraculously makes more sense with ice cream than with the usual widgets.

Jerry asserts in the foreword that the book is part of Lager's conspiracy to have the Ben & Jerry's story made into a movie.

"So, it's now clear to me that this book is all part of a calculated plan, and I for one refuse to be part of it. I won't read it, nor will I be seeing the blockbuster movie, now breaking all records at theaters across the country, in which Jon Lovitz plays me, in a riveting and deeply moving portrayal of the brilliant yet troubled ice cream magnate. Perhaps I'll catch the video. Enjoy," writes Jerry.

This is Jerry's sly modesty and strange sense of humor at work. Marketed along with Ben and Jerry's apparel, the company clearly supports the book. And, although Jerry doesn't find his story Hollywood-worthy, the book proves otherwise. But, until someone takes the time to write down this tasty tale, you'll have to make do with the book.

Dancing and ethnic customs will abound

by LAURA BERNHEIM
Daily Editorial Board

Tomorrow night, kick off your dancing shoes, wear ethnic garb, and enjoy great food at the Inter-Cultural Semi-Formal. Sponsored mainly by the Caribbean Club, the semi-formal has received support from other culture clubs, such as the Hispanic American Society, Tufts Association of South Asians (TASA), the Pan-African Alliance (PAA), Asian Community of Tufts, Korean Students Association, the Filipino Club, and the Armenian Club. According to Caribbean Club President, freshman Tiphonie Gundel, the idea for the semi-formal came in September, shortly after Gundel had experienced Tufts' International Orientation.

After being exposed to other cultures during those few days, Gundel felt as if she wanted to learn (and share) more, but that there was not much opportunity to do so during the actual school year. The Inter-Cultural Semi-Formal would be a way for Gundel and others to learn more about other ethnic traditions as well as share her own traditions.

"I wanted more of the mixing that was at [International Orientation]," Gundel said.

The Inter-Cultural Semi-Formal provided a way for this "mixing" to occur, as well as an opportunity to bring all culture groups together. Although the Caribbean Club was the main sponsor and planner, members of other organizations were also given other tasks in the planning.

"We didn't want just one organization to be responsible for the planning," said junior Paulo Barrio of the Hispanic Club.

"We wanted to make it a communal thing," Gundel said.

Along with members of the Tufts community, presidents from culture groups at area schools also received invitations giving all of the members a chance to get to know one another.

"We wanted to build better relations with them," Barrio said.

The Semi-Formal will not only feature dancing, but an hour-long performance by the dancing troupe Sinque. Gundel expressed great excitement about this troupe, who have also performed for the UN.

Students who attend the dance are encouraged to dress in traditional ethnic clothing. Those who don't own such clothing are, of course, still welcome, but everyone should at least try to wear something traditional. It should be educational and, according to Gundel, it will simply be "a fun thing to look at."

A lot of planning went into tomorrow night's event, which Gundel credits to several others.

"Groups were willing to cancel any plans that they also had [for Saturday night]," she said. "That was really wonderful. And all of the officers have been working hard."

Gundel also credited the Office of Student Activities for helping her.

Excitement seems to be building for the event, and many members of culture groups are looking forward to the dance.

"It should be a big turnout," Barrio said.

The Inter-Cultural Semi-Formal will be held tomorrow night from 7:30 p.m. to 2 a.m. at the Cambridge Marriot. Tickets are $10 a person and $15 a couple and are available at the Information Booth in the Campus Center. Tickets are also available from Anita Holman at x 1661. Shuttle busses will be running back and forth from the Campus Center from 8 p.m. to 2 a.m.

An appetizing 'World' at Hasty Pudding Theater

by ROB MCKEOWN

Senior Staff Writer

Playwrights Joseph Chaikin and Sam Shepard are back together once again. This time around the duo has served up an appetizing, 70-minute meditation on topics that range from food and fantasy to freedom and destiny. Nostalgically dubbed, When the World Was Green (A Chef's Fable) is the tale of two characters, an old man who has mistakenly poisoned the wrong person, and a younger woman who is interviewing him in a prison cell.

Events, and the mysteries behind them, are unfurled with charm and delicacy. The old man is a chef who comes from a village of mountainous bounty called Ameda; there, as a child, he became bound to both love and hate. What he loves is food, and he passionately describes everything from the noble traits of spices to the enchanting virtues of the marketplace. He certainly won't let you forget his signature dish, Quail with Pear Amaretto sauce, one of the many images (mostly savory) which endure after play's end.

What he hates, or so he thinks, is rooted in a generations-old family grudge based on the murder of their mule at the hands of neighboring cousins. "Because of the mule," as the old man frequently squawks, he must eventually poison his best friend, Carl, avenging the centuries-old grudge. Indeed, the chef has spent his whole life tracking his cousin, but he somehow manages to poison the wrong man.

The chef's new nemesis is his interviewer, whose past is equally enigmatic. Completely raised by women, she is a vegetarian (to the chef, the horror of horrors). Her stake seems at first to be journalistic, and her incessant questions

When the World Was Green

at the Hasty Pudding Theater through Sunday, April 6

plague the old man. But the pair soon find common ground. First, it's a love of mushrooms. Then mangoes and a chutney recipe. Later, they actually tap into some form of love — for him, amorous; for her, more familial. That, however, is not quite the whole story. The interviewer is somebody's daughter. Exactly whose daughter she is, nobody knows for sure, perhaps the chef's, perhaps that of the man he murdered.

Just like the play itself, the interviewer approaches these topics with the utmost care, focusing less attention on the immediate issues and more upon the abstract ones. It is within this realm of notions both broad and unexplained that the play operates.

Through reminiscence, celebration, and debate, the old man and his interviewer sink their teeth into a feast of issues. Their shadowy pasts touch topics like determinism, freedom, and family. Memory is the foundation of their eloquence and the questions their pasts pose are valid, not to mention vividly conveyed. But Shepard and Chaikin never seem to finish what they have started. Issues are raised but never resolved. The play may prosper because of reflection, but it also sputters by the same token.

Food is the most common metaphor, and there are several lovely odes to the pleasure it induces. As the central image, it opens an intimate window from which the audience can experience the events. Smiles abound when dishes are described, and there are probably more licked lips than clapping hands. It is almost impossible not to let your mouth water. Best to make dinner reservations beforehand.

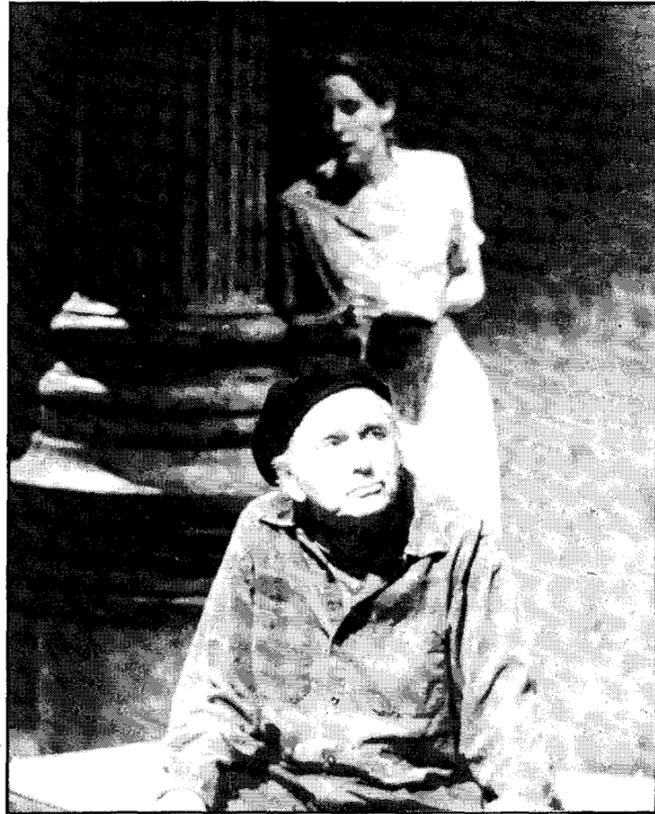

Amie Quigley, in the role of the interviewer, is dynamic. She exudes a charm that relies on a subtle combination of emotion, power, and grace, all of which are embodied by her singing. Like the luscious culinary imagery that often subsumes the play, her effect can be hallucinatory, one which plays upon the senses. Her counterpart, Alvin Epstein, does not fare quite as well in the part of the old man. For such an interesting character, Epstein simply doesn't dig deep enough. He is much too excitable and not mysterious enough. Some of his

and a chair are the only adornments. The entire arrangement is off-set only by a solitary square window, a dash of hope in a world of doubt.

Johnson Ambrosone's lush, atmospheric lighting is one of the play's crucial elements; it beautifully complements the set and helps reinforce the dramatic arc of the play. The only peripheral goof is the score, performed live on the piano. At its best, the score adds an addictive bounce to the more light-hearted exchanges, but it undermines the more poignant episodes with deplorable frequency.

In conceiving When the World Was Green, Shepard and Chaikin made a heady decision to use food as a medium for broad contemplation. The end result is much like a late-afternoon lunch in a back-alley bistro: surprising, pleasant, and timeless.

In When the World Was Green, Alvin Epstein and Amie Quigley ponder both delicacies and delicate issues.

While his uneven performance doesn't undermine the play, he doesn't do much to enlighten it either.

The rest of the production is very well-assembled. Christine Jones' set is admirably spartan, a sponge-painted, earth-toned wall as the backdrop to a jail cell. A slender bed, placed at a soft angle at the front of the cell, a small table,

When the World Was Green (A Chef's Fable) is a production of the American Repertory Theater. It will be playing at the Hasty Pudding Theater, at 8 Holyoke St. in Harvard Square, through this Sunday, April 6. Tickets range from $25 to $35 and are available at the box office and by calling 547-8300.

Kimberly goes bye-bye, and Allison going to the chapel

by ABBY SCHWARTZ

Melrose Place

"Ding, dong the bitch is dead, which old bitch?..." Well, you get the point. For those of you who didn't see the previews or the show this week, it is time to rejoice! Despite attempts by her mother and Michael to keep her alive, Kimberly has finally kicked the bucket. For real this time. (For all you cynics — yes, we did see her nestled tight in her coffin.) May the psycho rest in peace.

Back at Melrose Place, Sam's dad dropped into town to visit, and by the end of the episode he was not only borrowing money, but he was moving in as well. Surprisingly enough, Billy was not too pleased to be housing a beer-guzzling, mysterious ex-con, and even less pleased to discover that his girlfriend is really "trailer trash." But Sam made it pretty clear that under no circumstances would she kick dear daddy out. Guess we know who wears the panties — I mean pants — in that relationship.

Peter spent the entire episode trying to turn Taylor into his dead ex-wife, Beth. (He bought her an entirely new wardrobe, the lucky girl!) You know how that old saying goes — "if you can't be with the one you love, love the one you're sleeping with"... or something like that.

Both Matt and Sydney hit some pretty bad luck this week. First, Matt found out that he may be losing custody of his niece, Chelsea. Then the court took all of Sydney's assets (including her car, store, and her porno royalties) after she lost her case against the con artist who claimed to have fallen in her store. Afterwards, the opposing lawyer offered her a job taking fake spills, with the promise of big bucks. Who knows, maybe Sydney will be as good at falling down as she is at going down.

Well, the episode did end on quite a bright note — with a sweet marriage proposal by Allison. Talk about women's lib. At the start of the episode, Allison and Jake were given the sad news that Allison had to abort her baby in order to survive, and that the chances of her having kids in the future were slim to none. Jake's undying support and devotion were enough to get her to pop the question. If you ask me, he should have brought in the priest right then — it's awfully hard to run away when you're hooked up to all those machines.

Don't forget to tune in next week to see the sexual tension build between Amanda and Kyle, the hottie. I'm hoping for nudity, and lots of it.

Beverly Hills, 90210

The Brandon-Tracy-Kelly love triangle got even crazier this week when Brandon took Tracy to Hong Kong to visit dear old dad (Mrs. Walsh was visiting a mon-stricken Brenda in Europe... I wonder if Dylan's got it too). In a father-son heart to heart, Brandon admitted that he was still carrying a torch for Kelly, and Kelly spent the episode wearing that damn engagement ring around her neck and pining for Brandon. That is, until Steve saw the ring and told her to give up hope (he never was the brightest of the gang). If you ask me, it's about time that Tracy gets kicked to the curb, and Brandon and Kelly walk down the aisle. Enough of this drama already.

Donna's dad took a giant step towards recovering from his stroke this week, when it was announced

'Godfather of Soul' Brown to get funky in Beantown

by JOHN REED

Senior Staff Writer

It must be an overwhelming honor to have been the inspiration for almost every funk, soul, and drop, combined with an explosive stage show and muscle-defying choreography, was so influential that everyone from George Clinton to Rick James to Prince (TAFKAP) should still be paying Brown royalties for all the ideas of his they stole. Most of Brown's albums are essential, but the original and stellar "Live at the Apollo," was a ground-breaking masterpiece, and without a doubt the best live funk album ever.

Lately, Brown's personal tragedies have seemed to dim the fact that Brown was responsible over the years for bringing to light such influential musicians as P-Funk's "Bootsy" Collins, Fred Wesley, and Maceo Parker, all of whom were given their first chance to shine as one of Brown's sidemen.

In a rare Boston appearance, Brown will perform in concert with his orchestra on Friday April 18, 8 reer in either baseball or boxing. A leg injury led to him turning his attention to music full-time.

Brown's own mix of gospel-like vocals over an intense R&B back-rap band that has ever cut a "funky" track in the past four decades. To have your name put on a pedestal with the likes of, say, Elvis Presley, and to be given several nicknames (e.g. "the Godfather of Soul," "Mr. Dynamite," "The Hardest Working Man in Show Business"), all of these accolades would be a great overstatement for most performers, but James Brown deserves all the praise, and more.

James Brown

Wang Center
April 18

Since 1956, Brown has amassed a staggering 800-song repertoire, received 44 Gold Record awards, and had 114 singles on the Billboard R&B singles chart (94 of which made the Hot 100 singles chart).

This is an impressive feat for anyone, but more outstanding for someone like Brown, a Depression era child who had to dance on street corners and shine shoes for spare change in his youth. Brown emerged from a life of poverty and seriously wanted to pursue a ca-

Jumbos blow past ol' Mother Nature

by PAULARAMER
Contributing Writer

Although Mother Nature refused to cooperate with the plans for the first women's track meet last Saturday, the Jumbos managed to have a successful day. Drizzle throughout the day and heavy downpours late in the afternoon ended the meet early, but several Tufts athletes placed in their events, and even more qualified for future championship meets.

In the 100-meter race, sophomore Melissa Harper placed ninth and qualified for the ECACs, and junior captain Megan Upham made New Englands. Upham and sophomore Heather Rosoff both qualified for the New Englands in the 200.

Senior captain Rosalie Ferrara had a noteworthy day, coming in tenth in the 200, making the New Englands, and placing seventh in the 400, qualifying for the ECACs. Additionally, she fared well on the field, where she placed in both the long jump and the triple jump and made both the New Englands and the ECACs.

Freshman Missy Bargmann also did especially well in the meet. She placed fifth in the 100 hurdles and third in the 400 hurdles, making New Englands in both events. Sophomore Anya Meyers came in seventh in the 400 hurdles, qualifying for the ECACs. In the 100 hurdles, senior Esperanza Andrade and junior Lianne Carahasen both qualified for championship meets.

In the 800, a typically strong event for the team, senior Randi Henry placed seventh and qualified for ECACs, and sophomore Jenifer Shapiro came in tenth, making New Englands. Senior Sarah Redman came in fourth in the 3000 which also qualified her for New Englands. In the 5000, senior captain Rachel Wildman made New Englands, placing fifth.

The relay teams also did quite well. In the 4x100 relay, the Jumbos came in third, and the two 4x400 relays teams placed first and second, respectively.

The Jumbos were less successful on the field, however. Freshman Darcy Fitzsimmons threw a personal best and Ferrara placed

Through clouds and rain, Tufts tracks down victory

by HOWARD NEWMAN
Senior Staff Writer

On a cloudy and rainy Saturday, the men's track team was still able to shine at the Snowflake Classic last weekend, held here at Tufts. Competing against many Division I schools, the Jumbos made their presence felt as veterans of the team continued to display their talents, while many runners participated in some events for the first time.

The grueling 10,000 meter race was exciting to watch as seniors Michael Northrop and Bryan Graham led most of the way. Northrop was then able to gain a substantial lead on a runner from Keene State and finished first with a time of 31:40.2. Graham placed fifth with a time of 32:30.5, his career best.

"I was extremely pleased with the race," Northrop said. "It could not have been better, and we are happy with our time. This is a very good starting point for us and we should definitely make the nationals."

In the 5,000 event, senior Scott Masiella and junior Rodney Hemingway stayed in the front of the pack for the Jumbos, finishing second and third respectively. Running at an even pace throughout the race, Masiella then created some distance between himself and his teammate.

"Scott and I haven't really been doing any speed work," Hemingway said. "We tried to run at an even pace throughout most of the race. Scott felt good and made up some distance between him and me. This is a great early season indicator as to how we are standing."

Senior co-captain Jesse

Chertoff finished third in the 110 high hurdles, while freshman Tom Ensminger placed eighth. "I had a good trial," Chertoff said. "I thought the race went really well but I didn't finish as well as I would have liked to. I'm pretty pleased with the first meet."

"It was my first time doing the 110 hurdles at the college height," Ensminger added. "This race gives me confidence to do better."

The 3,000 steeplechase had many people in the crowd on the edge of their seats as freshman Matthew Lyons, running in this race for the first time, was the third runner to cross the finish line and junior Benjamin Piecuch claimed fifth place. "I was pleased with my running," remarked Piecuch. "We haven't done a lot of hurdle work and we'll be posting good times toward the end of the season."

The Jumbos placed sixth in the finals of the 4x100 relay. Featured in the race for Tufts were sophomore Christian Hilliard, sophomore Peter Loeb, freshman Eric Cho, and sophomore Rommel Childress. Childress thinks the relay teams can improve.

"We'll definitely be doing better," said Childress. "The handoffs were not that great and there were some guys not running that should have, since we were trying out people to see who does well in each event."

In the field events, sophomore Matthew Spaeder finished sixth in the shot put while senior Josh King placed fourth in the discus throw and fifth in the hammer throw. Sophomore Brandon Smith had a career performance in the hammer throw and placed 13th.

King, though, was not very pleased with his day. "I didn't throw that great," he remarked. "It wasn't really a spectacular day for me. Better things are to come."

The men's track team may have a bright future this season. "We're still a little rusty," Chertoff said. "We had a lot of competition last weekend. We have a lot to work with and a lot to work on."

"We rested some people," added Coach Connie Putnam. "It was a pretty good start to the season. Everybody was out there ready to perform. It was a typical first meet."

If the snow is cleared, the Jumbos hope to have a productive day tomorrow at the Jumbo Invitational at Ellis Oval, starting at 11:00a.m.

The answer is in the Stars

by SAMERDHEIM
Daily Editorial Board

As the regular season comes to a close, there are only a few teams that can be classified as the league's elite. These teams include the 1996 defending Stanley Cup Champion Colorado Avalanche, the Philadelphia Flyers, the New Jersey Devils, and the Dallas Stars. Dallas has quietly had a tremendous year after finishing sixth in the Central Division last year. The Stars have pulled a from worst-to-first this season as they clinched the division title two days ago.

Dallas, riding an 11-game unbeaten streak [9-0-2], has a 47-23-6 record, good for 100 team points, second only to the 'Lanche's 103. After last season's embarrassment, GM Bob Gainey made some significant moves in the off-season by trading for defenseman Sergei Zubov, and by signing forwards Pat Verbeek and Dave Reid, and goaltender Arturs Irbe.

These moves paid immediate dividends as Zubov has settled in as a point man on the power play, while playing solid defense. Verbeek is the team's second leading scorer with 16 goals and 50 points, and has played solid two-way hockey with his usual gritty style, as shown by his 116 penalty minutes. Reid has been a strong player on the penalty killing unit and has also chipped in offensively with 17 goals and 37 points. Irbe has been the biggest surprise, though, with a 15-10-3 record, a 2.61 Goals Against Average, and an .898 save percentage.

The Stars' resurgence this season can be partly attributed to the play of the newcomers and the team's depth, but they could not be considered among the NHL's elite

Game, set, match: Tufts Jumbos' tennis crushes Clark, Conn. College

by JOHNSTEMEN
Senior Staff Writer

There is no way to make it sound nice to sugarcoat it. The men's tennis team simply crushed Clark and Connecticut College.

The Jumbos have fully rebounded from their disappointing Spring Break trip and now sit even at four wins and four losses.

Clark University fell victim to the fired-up Tufts squad last Wednesday. It takes six games to win one set, it takes two sets to win one individual match, and it takes four individual matches to win the overall match. That equals a minimum of 48 games in singles play, and Clark managed to win only two.

Tufts' singles players double-baged their opposition in almost every match. Only number-one Scott Roehm and freshman Chris Ross dropped one single game each.

The Jumbos clinched the victory with singles play. That allowed Coach Jim Watson to play some younger players in the doubles competition. Jeff Smith and Andres Schumann teamed up and won an easy 8-3 victory.

The freshman duo of David Hatkoff and Evan Casper won in the only close match of the day. The 8-6 score was the only challenge the Jumbos faced. The 7-0 score of the day showed the complete dominance of the Jumbos.

Tufts next blasted past Connecticut College on Saturday. A quality Camel squad fell 5-1 to the Jumbo steamroller. "It was a message that we can beat solid teams," said sophomore Adam DeMezza.

Senior Andy Schwartz and junior Steve Cooper both won in close two set matches, 7-5, 7-5 and 6-4, 6-4, respectively. Ross won in an easy 6-4, 6-1 match.

Two Jumbos found themselves down a set and struggling to stay in the match. Senior co-captain James Kinnear battled back to win 0-6, 6-4, 7-6. DeMezza dropped the first set 5-7 before winning the last two sets 6-4, 6-2. The comebacks of these two players locked the victory for Tufts.

"We had a few close matches but everyone pulled it out and that was very big for us," said Roehm.

Watson rested his doubles teams again because the Jumbos clinched the win after the singles play. This could hurt the team later in the season when doubles often decide the match.

"Conn. College is a solid team and probably a little better than last year," said Roehm. "So it was a good win for us."

The freak snowstorm caused the cancellation of two matches this week, including a highly anticipated matchup with arch-rival Amherst.

"It was good that we missed Amherst. It was the first week of the season, and I think the more matches we get, the better we will be playing," said DeMezza.

Watson and his team have the line-up set. "I think any changes will be made out of necessity now and not just [done] randomly," said Roehm.

The Jumbos look to continue the roll over the rest of New England, in tomorrow's scheduled match with Wesleyan on the Fletcher Courts at 1 p.m.

Hitchcock directs team well

without the play of the team's star, Mike Modano. While he still has not put up the stellar offensive numbers that have been expected from him since he came into the league, he does lead the team in scoring at a little above a point-per-game clip and is 15th in the league in scoring. Modano has 33 goals and 78 assists, but more importantly he has become a solid two-way player, as shown by his plus-41 rating.

Depth and the coaching of Ken Hitchcock are the other reasons for the team's success. Hitchcock has a lot of forward depth to work with and has put together a solid scoring line, as well as a top checking line. From the beginning he has been straightforward with his players and they've responded well. Hitchcock has let his expectations be known to the players and he has coached them to deliver, and deliver they have. Though Modano is the only Dallas player to place among the top 25 in scoring, the Stars boast the fifth-best offense in the league with 239 goals. At the same time, their defense has not suffered, as Dallas has only allowed 181 goals, second-best in the NHL. Besides having a solid defense corps, Hitchcock has gotten his forwards to forecheck relentlessly. The defense has consistently been in position all year long, and the backliners have made good decisions at jumping into the offense.

Modano is teamed with Jere Lehtinen and Greg Adams to form the top line. Lehtinen has 14 goals and 38 points, as well as a solid plus-23 rating. Adams has fought injuries all season and has appeared in only 46 games, but when playing, he has performed well with 20 goals and a plus-25 rating. Verbeek and rookie Jamie Langenbrunner flank Joe Nieuwendyk, who has bounced back from a terrible year in which he scored 14 goals. Nieuwendyk is second on the team in goals with 29 and has 48 points. Langenbrunner is fifth among rookies in scoring with 13 goals and 38 points.

Other forwards contributing are Reid, Benoit Hogue, Brent Gilchrist, Todd Harvey, Guy Carbonneau, and Grant Marshall. All take regular shifts and have chipped in with strong checking and defensive play as well as providing some offensive help, as seen by Hogue's 18 goals and 40 points. He also has a plus-11 rating, which is a huge plus for a player known as a defensive liability.

The defense is very strong, with Zubov, Darryl Sydor, Derian Hatcher, Grant Ledyard, Craig Ludwig, and Richard Matvichuk. Sydor has come into his own this year and has led all defensemen in scoring since the All-Star break. His 46 points ranks him fourth on the team in scoring and 11th among defensemen. He also boasts a plus-37 rating. Hatcher is the opposing defender that every team wants and has played accordingly. Ledyard and Ludwig are solid defenders who have plus/minus ratings over 20, and Matvichuk is better than a sixth defenseman.

The goaltending was a question mark before the season began, but Andy Moog has put forth a career year, with a 28-12-3 record, a 2.14 GAA (second in the league to Martin Brodeur), and a .913 save percentage. With Irbe and Roman Turek backing him up, the Stars have the second best goaltending unit in the NHL next to only New Jersey.

This all translates into a team that will be tough to beat in the playoffs. With a spread-out offensive attack, teams can't focus on any specific player. The Stars also are a sound defensive team, and in the playoffs, defense and goaltending are key. Dallas was built for the playoffs and it will thrive. Though Colorado is the odds-on favorite to repeat as Cup Champs, watch out for the Stars. From their standpoint, the season will be a washout if they don't win the Cup. They have high standards, but, even more importantly they are playing up to those standards and will fight to the end.

p.m. at the Wang Theater. Opening the show for Brown will be Boston's hottest swing-soul-blues band Bellevue Cadillac, who due to a contractual agreement recently turned down an invitation to perform at the wedding of an unnamed celebrity (The wedding was none other than JFK Jr.; the band did not know the couple's identity until later).

Tickets for the show range from $28 to $88 and can be purchased through Ticketmaster or at the Wang Theater box office. A portion of the proceeds will benefit The Boston Blues Society.

that he could leave the hospital. After a big dispute about whether or not to put him in a rehab center, Donna and her mother took him home. Donna even went as far as hanging crystal prisms in the window of his rooms, the very same "magic prisms" that he hung in her room when she was a child. He claimed that when she wasn't feeling well, she should just close her eyes and let the prisms "take her over the rainbow to the land of candy and chocolates."

She may very well have gone, but with a body like hers, we know she didn't eat very much when she was there.

The episode ended with some pretty big news — Rob asked Valerie to take over as his manager and, loving the sound of 10 percent royalties, she gladly accepted. It seems that he didn't really mind that she accepted a $10,000 bribe from his former manager to get him to be in his next film. Valerie's excuse that his manager was a snake was good enough for him. Looks like he's thinking with his snake.

But the highlight of the show was undoubtedly an appearance by the Barenaked Ladies, singing some of my favorite tunes, "Brian Wilson," "Life in a Nutshell," and "Old Apartment." In only a few weeks, we can show them that the president's lawn kick's the After Dark's ass any day of the week.

in her events, while the rest of the group neither placed nor qualified for championship meets.

Coach Branwen Smith-King was extremely pleased with her team's performance. "It was a very profitable meet for us," she said. "Many of us qualified for future meets. It's all very promising and exciting."

Though Smith-King knew her team would do well this season, a performance like Saturday's came sooner than she expected. She admitted, however, that they need more athletes in the field events and especially more to jump, but said that was not going to be a primary focus of the team.

In the coming weeks, Smith-King will concentrate on athletes' individual performances. She will also work on improving her team's attitude. "They need to sharpen up and work on their mental game. If they are able to think positively and say 'I can do this,' they'll have a good chance to do well."

Their next chance comes tomorrow morning at 11 a.m. in the Jumbo Invitational at Ellis Oval.
