

Senate to Evaluate Security

The following is an excerpt of a letter dated July 14, 1980 written by Senate Chairman Phil Swain to the chairman of the Senate Services Committee, Chuck Greenberg.

"It has occurred to me that security on campus isn't all it could be—how about the Services Committee doing an evaluative report on the state of security on campus? Let me know what you think."

By Bill Frechtman

"Security should be updated all the time," said Greenberg in an interview yesterday, explaining that the Senate had already begun the motion of security analysis before the assaults of last week.

"Two letters to the Daily earlier this week blamed the Senate for inaction regarding campus security. "It's the Senate's responsibility to point out security deficiencies," said Greenberg. It was the Senate analysis in the Spring of 1979 which pressured the administration to bring in the Burns Security corporation to evaluate the campus.

Gatto Denies Medford Charge

by John Neff

Cathy Gatto, who is co-owner of the house at 19 Fairmount Street with her husband Vic Gatto, yesterday denied charges made by Medford city officials that the residence is operating as a "lodging house" in contravention of state law.

She dismissed the allegation made by Medford police that nine persons were found to reside in the house, saying that the police were mistaken in "The whole idea of security fits in with the general Senate attitude of improving campus life," said Swain. The Services Committee plans an exhaustive analysis of existing security procedures and apparatus, as well as police usage. Greenberg pointed out that foot patrolmen at night should be more visible in traditional trouble areas. He cited the area surrounding the library and Cohen as such. "There are still dark areas around campus," he added.

Greenberg explained that the Safety Shuttle Van is a system available to all students but sits idle most of the time. Assistant Dean of Students Bruce Reitman concurred, explaining that peer pressure from upper classmen has developed that blocks many students from utilizing the van.

The van is available every night from 7 p.m. to 3 a.m., and is very quick to respond to students' calls, said Reitman.

(To reach the Shuttle Van, dial 6611 from a university extension, or 625-HELP from an outside line.)

taking students' statements at face value.

When the police came to break-up a party on the second floor of the house, Gatto said, they ordered everyone who did not live there to leave. The police then came a second time, and when they found all nine students still in the floor, they concluded that all nine resided there, Gatto said.

Tufts' Accreditation to be Reviewed

by Dan Kiryelejza

A committee from the New England Association of Schools and Colleges (NEASC) will evaluate Tufts University for re-accreditation for three days during mid-November.

The committee will be made up of several academic specialists from regional colleges and will be chaired by Bucknell University President Dennis O'Brien. President O'Brien also served in evaluating Amherst and Yale.

According to Dean Mumford of the Graduate School, who is the Tufts representative aiding in the review process, the committee will have a work room on campus, clearance to any documents it wishes, and the ability to conduct interviews with any member of the Tufts community.

The committee will focus their attention primarily on the Liberal Arts and Jackson colleges, as the graduate schools answer to other accrediting organizations.

Mumford stated that there is a tendency now for "more stringent control" in accrediting reviews. He went on to say that colleges are now being evaluated every three to five years, instead of the traditional ten year period.

Tufts itself will aid in the evaluation by submitting a three-page summary of university programs and life to the NEASC.

Presently, a steering committee has been created under Mumford, to direct and supervise the compilation of the summary.

When Tufts was last accredited in 1970 the most important topics mentioned were: new quarters for the psychology department, a major increase in funding for the library, and a general concern over the lack respectively the quality of student life, graduate and professional programs and the economic status of the faculty.

The relationship of the Lincoln-Filene Center to the rest of the university was questioned as well.

Asked whether this problem had been solved, Mumford answered, "no, it hasn't," but added that the new Dean of the center has been working on a closer academic relationship with Tufts.

The major topics of concern for the current review seem to be the projected deficit in the Arts and Sciences budget, the structural changes occurring with the resignations of many minority personnel, and the results of the present fund drive.

Mumford also stated however, that there is absolutely no danger of Tufts losing its accreditation.

Three subcommittees have also been created to aid in this process, studying of direction in the growth of the university.

Hardie Returns Ready To Run

by David Rabin

Running 70 to 100 miles a week may seem incomprehensible to the average jogger, but such maniacal training methods are commonplace to Mark Hardie and other Tufts long distance runners. Hardie, a 5'10", 134 pound junior, is the captain of the Tufts Cross country team for the his desire to return and improve his abilities this year.

As a three sport athlete early in high school, Hardie stuck with running because "everyone grew but me." Running was made much more enjoyable for Hardie back in Holyoke, Mass. by his coach who always offered enthusiasm and en-second straight year.

After an impressive high school career including two consecutive years with all-Western Massachusetts honors, Hardie arrived at Tufts. He won letters in both indoor and outdoor track his first year, and as a sophomore won all-New England honors and represented Tufts at the nationals. A disappointing race there served to sharpen couragement. Running is such a part of his daily routine that Mark says, "I feel hyperactive when I don't run. I guess it's become a habit."

Aside from his athletic achievements, Hardie is a big contributor to the Tufts community. He is an R.A., a Host Advisor and a member of the Leonard Carmichael Society.

"I think the place is great," says Hardie of his experience at Tufts. "Sometimes I think I'd prefer a Division One situation, but I really feel comfortable with the academic and social scene and enjoy the low key atmosphere."

For now, this bright and talented student athlete will keep mixing books with running in search of his peak. A quest that should bring him across many finish line tapes first.
