A. ABDULLAH

A Forum Interview .....5

The acting Foreign Minister of the Islamic State of Afghanistan offers his government's views on the prospects for peace in Afghanistan, while calling for a comprehensive U.S. policy.

ABDUL HAKIM MUJAHID

A Forum Interview .....11

The Taliban Representative to the U.N. addresses the dynamics of the ongoing Afghan civil war and the challenges confronting the Taliban government.

PETER TOMSEN

Untying the Afghan Knot .....17

Ambassador Tomsen, former special envoy to the Mujahideen, urges a reformulation of U.S. policy toward Afghanistan to confront the challenges the civil war poses to international peace and stability, and highlights Pakistan's role in the conflict.

STEPHEN W. BOSWORTH

U.S.-Korea Relations After the Summit.....25

Ambassador Bosworth reflects on the recent rapprochement between North and South Korea, and its implications for future U.S.-Korea relations.

SUNG CHUL YANG

South Korea's Sunshine Policy: Progress and Predicaments .....31

Ambassador Yang outlines South Korea's Sunshine Policy towards North Korea, arguing that it has been largely responsible for bringing about the current rapprochement between the two Koreas. He also discusses the future of U.S.-Korean relations.

PETER CUKOR AND LEE MCKNIGHT

Knowledge Networks, the Internet, and Development .....43

Cukor and McKnight discuss how increased access and more affordable connectivity to advanced information and communication technologies, especially wireless and Internet services, are making on-line information increasingly available to development professionals and citizens of developing countries.

ROBERT GROSSE AND JUAN YAÑES

Why Oil Will Cost $5 per Barrel in 2010 .....59

Grosse and Yañes argue that improved technologies will decrease the cost of oil extraction, thus increasing supply, while the development of alternate energy sources will reduce the demand for oil. The interaction of these two forces will lead to a much lower oil price in the near future.

FERDINAND TESORO AND JACK TOOTSON

Implementing a Global Performance Measurement System for Your Organization .....75

Tesoro and Tootson emphasize the vital importance of performance measurement systems in today's globalized world and offer guidelines for establishing such mechanisms.

Japan-U.S. Missile Defense Collaboration: Rhetorically Delicious, Deceptively Dangerous .....85

Mitchell cautions that policymakers in the U.S. and Japan are using deceptive and calculated rhetoric and claims to sell a dangerous missile defense system to the Japanese and American publics.

LEONARDO VIVAS

Why Chavez in Venezuela?.....109

Vivas examines the rise to power of populist Venezuelan president Hugo Chavez, and warns that his political style may be a harbinger of things to come in the Andean region.

MIROSLAV PRCE

Revising Dayton Using European Solutions .....143
 Prce, Defense Minister of Bosnia and Herzegovina, argues that the Dayton Peace Agreement is a third attempt to centralize and de-nationalize Bosnia and Herzegovina and, like the two previous efforts, is bound to fail. The agreement can only be salvaged if it takes into account the state's multi-ethnic reality.

JUDITH YAPHE

Three Crises in Search of a Policy .....153
 Yaphe discusses the complex challenges facing the new U.S. president in the Middle East, with a focus on Iran, Iraq, and the Israeli-Palestinian conflict.

EPAMINONDAS MARIAS

Toward a Political Community in the Aegean Area: .....161
New Opportunities for Greece and Turkey
 Marias argues that the current moves toward rapprochement between Greece and Turkey are the result of a laudable plan to focus on issues of 'low politics' before addressing more controversial topics like Cyprus.
