Jumbos on the Rebound Defeat Wesleyan

by Jorge Consuegra

The Tufts University football team re-established its winning ways Saturday in Middletown, Connecticut by beating the Wesleyan Cardinals 18-8. Coming off the shocking loss to Trinity one week ago, the Jumbos combined a powerful offensive running game with an awesome defense to manhandle the Cardinals on their home field.

Tufts built up a commanding 18-0 lead before Wesleyan could score with only ten minutes left in the ball game.

A number of factors contributed to the overall solid Tufts performance. The addition of healthy halfback Nick Rossetti, who saw limited duty against Trinity, certainly aided the Jumbo cause. Over half of Rossetti's 82 total yards came on a 50 yard scamper at the 7:47 mark of the first quarter. Kicker Mark Litner's extra point attempt went through the uprights and Tufts led 7-0.

The Jumbo arsenal continued to roll into the second quarter as quarterback Tom Beaton blasted in from the two yard line for his third touchdown of the year. Rossetti then further illustrated his running prowess by darting into the end zone to make the two point conversion attempt successful.

Mark Litner, who was absent during the Jumbo's losing effort the week before, culminated Tufts' scoring with a 37 yard field goal at the 7:39 point of the third quarter.

In addition to Rossetti and Litner, quarterback Scott Carpenter saw more playing time this week and turned in a fine performance. Punter Bobby Finegan improved his kicking from the week before by punting for a 38.8 yard average which was supplemented with a 65 yard punt. In all, even though the Jumbos were plagued by numerous penalties as a result of faulty execution, the offense played a strong game throughout the afternoon.

The defensive unit quieted a supposedly potent Cardinal offense all day long. Middle guard Tim Keegan had 10 unassisted tackles while linebacker Tom Duffy tallied 10. Sophomore

Clerical Workers Veto Union Bid

by John Neff

Tufts clerical and technical workers voted down a proposal to unionize under the banner of the Service Employees International Local 925 by a margin of 171 to 135 in an election held Friday afternoon.

The vote brought to an end a unionization drive which lasted for almost two years, survived an administration attempt to combine Medford and downtown employees under one voting unit, and involved months of hearings before the National Labor Relations Board.

Of Tufts' three hundred and fifty-six eligible employees, three hundred and six ballots were counted, according to NLRB officials present at the vote counting site in Alumane Lounge. One ballot was counted as void and twenty-four were challenged, according to the NLRB, but the number of challenged ballots was not enough to bring the results into question.

University Personnel Director Linda Lerner said, "We're extremely please at the very large turnout," adding that the vote "represented what everybody wanted. Everyone had over two years to review the facts."

Lerner said, "We will now be looking ahead to direct our activities back toward very productive activity. As Jean Mayer said, "we're looking forward to building a great university." She added, "I'm glad it's over."

Sukkah Vandalized

To The Editor:

On Saturday night, the Tufts Sukkah, on top of Memorial Steps, was vandalized. The Sukkah (small booth) had been set up by the Tufts Jewish Community to celebrate the Jewish holiday of Sukkot. This holiday commemorates the time when Jews lived in small booths during the forty years they wandered in the desert. A sign, hung on the Sukkah, explained its significance. Several people must have been involved in this vandalism; the Sukkah was lifted off the ground and thrown onto Memorial Steps.

There is no way to know if those responsible for this act were Tufts students. If the vandals knew that this was a Sukkah, built to celebrate a Jewish holiday, then the act was anti-semitic and should be recognized as such. If this was another example of Saturday night rowdiness, it was an act that hurt the feelings and disturbed the sensitivities of the Tufts Jewish Community.

We managed to repair and rebuild the Sukkah, but I believe it is important that the Tufts community know of this matter and our concern.

porters, who gathered at Alumnae Lounge, had no comments on the results. The group, however, which numbered more than twenty-five, was visibly shaken by the loss and apparently surprised by it. Supporters had made statements expressing confidence in victory earlier in the week.

FOOTBALL, CONTINUED

Mark Harasimowicz aided the Jumbo defensive backfield by recording his first interception and making six unassisted tackles. Defensive end John Galanis also turned in a fine game for the Jumbos, along with Steve Finnegan and Dan Gillis who delivered a simultaneous crushing sack on Cardinal quarterback Gary Darella.

Taiwanese Dance Troupe Blends Art With 'Goodwill'

by Neil G. Newman

There are certain times when art and politics, like vinegar and oil, should be seen together but not mixed. Such was the occasion last Thursday night in Cohen Auditorium when the Youth Goodwill Mission from Taiwan presented "An Adventure in Chinese Songs and Dance."

Although it is the group's sixth cross-country tour, it seems to have come at a time when renewed curiosity about the East is directed not at Taiwan but at The People's Republic of China, with whom we established diplomatic relations two years ago December. Clearly the group was not as concerned with the cultural enlightenment of the audience as in reminding them that Taiwan is still around, is still as loyal to the U.S., and is still separate from their brothers on the mainland.

The evening consisted of two acts which traced the roots of song and dance in Taiwan and paid tribute to the early settlers who came to the island over three hundred years ago. Unfortunately the group's desire to bring goodwill to "all their friends in the States" necessitated a rather extensive Westernizing of the subject matter. One overly descriptive program blurb even went so far as to describe one segment as "spiced with a hot disco rhythm."

Because the company as a whole lacked specialized dance training, they were limited to overly simple choreography that often times was repetitious and indifferently performed, especially by the male ensemble. During "On Horseback" (a piece that, according to the expensively printed glossy souvenir program, "manages to capture the zesty energy of cocky thoroughbreds and the wispy freshness of brilliant sunshine and fragrant breezes") the mistimed cracks of the men's riding crops gave both a visual and aural impression of sloppiness.

By far the best ballet of the evening was "Planting Rice." For once the dancing was well synchronized and the energy level high as the dancers created swirling rows of stooped farmers full of hope for the first spring planting.

Due to the enthusiastic efforts of the Asian Club, who undertook the selling of tickets in Chinatown, the audience was packed with Chinese families who clearly enjoyed each and every number. Though most of the second half of the program had nothing at all to do with the evolution of song and dance in China, and everything to do with (again a quote from the program) "the pioneer spirit of bravery, perseverance and optimism" of modern-day Taiwan, that didn't keep them from applauding to "The Whistle of the Train," a ballet that depicted the coming of the first railroad to Taiwan. It also didn't keep them from giving a standing ovation to the company as they unveiled an enormous Taiwanese flag that covered the entire back wall of the stage and sang the traditional song that accompanies the flag-raising ceremony.

Although "An Adventure In Chinese Songs and Dance" was not an electrifying evening, it should be praised as the sort of cultural event that should be actively encouraged and supported by the university community. However, it is of the utmost importance that these programs be concerned with the broadening of our cultural horizons and not with shows of national pride and loyalty.
