

Suspect has not been identified from Saturday's Sig Ep incident

by LAUREN HEIST
Daily Editorial Board

Though his face is sketched on posters around campus, and he is wanted for brandishing a silver handgun to two Sigma Phi Epsilon brothers Saturday morning, the male who fled campus has yet to be located by Tufts Police.

"We do have some leads as to the identities of some of the people who were there, but we haven't gotten the identification of the person with the gun yet," TUPD Lt. Mark Keith said.

Keith said that if the suspect is apprehended, the police would have enough probable cause to file a complaint to the local courts.

If the suspect were then found guilty, Keith said, the punishment for this alleged assault with a weapon could be severe. "The punishment could be prison time because it is a felony charge," he said.

Sig Ep brother Francisco Narganes, a junior, was the one who assisted the police with the composite sketch of the suspect.

"Out of a scale of one to ten, [Narganes] said it was an eight as far as likeness," Keith said.

Another Sig Ep brother, David Beck, said that Narganes was the one who got the best look at the suspect.

Beck said that as the brothers were attempting to clear out a party around 2 a.m. on Saturday morning, a quarrel ensued between a group of six non-Tufts students and some of the brothers.

As the party-goers were assembling outside, Beck said he had his back toward the group of non-Tufts students standing on the curb.

"I turned around, and I didn't see this guy coming at all," Beck said. But Beck said Narganes saw the suspect pull out the gun. "He thought the kid was going to shoot me," Beck said.

"I literally did not think anything," Beck said. "It just happened so quick, and I never suspected it."

The police arrived on the scene shortly after the suspects ran away, Keith said. "We did a thorough area search in an attempt to locate them," he said.

Keith said there are always more "town-gown" problems in the fall than later in the year. "As you get further into the semester things begin to calm down," Keith said.

The TUPD lieutenant attributed some of these problems to the fact that there are more parties held by frat houses in the fall. "Also, with the warmer weather, there are more people out and about," he said.

"In hopes to avoid further problems, I think a lot of the individual houses need to take it upon themselves to screen who they let into the parties," Keith said.

Beck said he has already noticed fraternities cracking down on who they admit into their houses. "I saw a lot of kids get turned away from houses because they did not have Tufts IDs, and there were no problems because of it," Beck said.

Tisch Library was one of the buildings affected by the power outage today.

Power outage leaves students in the dark

by LAUREN HEIST
Daily Editorial Board

Tufts Police and Buildings and Grounds workers remain in the dark as to the cause of yesterday's hour-long electrical power outage which occurred between approximately 3:45 p.m. and 4:45 p.m.

Both the police and B&G did say that the outage was caused by Massachusetts Electric. "It was their problem," one B&G supervisor said, following the restoration of power. Leslie Kriebel, reference desk coordinator at the Tisch Library, said that the entire library had to be evacuated when the power went out. In the library at that time, she said, "There were probably 50 people, not including staff."

Tufts' orchestra was also affected by the lack of electricity yesterday. The orchestra, which usually practices in Aidekman Arts Center, was forced to move their practice outside when the lights were suddenly shut off.

"I was walking home to Stratton and I heard this music and I saw all these people on the sidewalk and I thought 'oh that's so nice.' I didn't know it was because of the power outage," said sophomore Nicole Apostola. "They should do that all the time," she added.

Drama Professor Downing Cless also led his class outside during the power outage. Junior Brian Schneider, a student in Drama I, said, "The power went off and the teacher left the class to go get flashlights because we couldn't see our way out because we were in the basement of Aidekman."

"We had class outside which I think all classes should do," he said.

Fernando Yang, an employee at the Eaton Computer Lab, said that the power outage did not seriously affect students working in the computer lab at the time.

"People just left when the power went off," he said.

He added that once power was restored, lab assistants made sure that students did not delete the documents they were working on.

"I don't think they lost anything," he said.

Bomb deals serious blow to peace talks in Ireland

Los Angeles Times-Washington
Post News Service

BELFAST—A massive bomb left in a van exploded Tuesday in the center of a rural town outside Belfast, causing extensive damage to surrounding buildings and dealing a serious blow to the fledgling Northern Ireland peace talks.

The bomb exploded just before noon outside a livestock market and adjacent police station in Markethill, about 40 miles southwest of Belfast. Police received a telephoned warning about 40 minutes before the explosion and worked frantically to evacuate the busy downtown.

There were no serious injuries, but the blast ripped through the small town's livestock market, damaged brick and masonry buildings nearby and blew out windows in homes and businesses blocks away.

No one claimed responsibility for the blast, but a police official said it was "carefully planned," "professionally carried out," and timed for the busiest day of the week in the town.

"This was [carried out] by people with a total disregard for life," said Ronnie Flanagan, head of the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

Spokesmen for the Unionist parties, who generally represent the Protestant majority in Northern Ireland and favor continued union with Britain, accused the outlawed Irish Republican Army of complicity in the bombing. Leaders of the Ulster Unionist Party, the largest of the unionist groups, demanded that the IRA's political arm, Sinn Fein, be thrown out of the all-party peace talks.

The IRA, which announced a cease-fire in July that opened the way for Sinn Fein to be invited into the peace talks, denied any involvement in the attack at Markethill. News reports here raised suspicions that the bombing might have been carried out by an IRA splinter group known as the Continuity Army Council, which has announced opposition to the cease-fire.

Sinn Fein president Gerry Adams and other Sinn Fein spokesmen expressed "regret" and "disappointment" over the bomb blast, but called on unionists not to use it as a pretext to avoid participating in the peace process. Sinn Fein is one of the republican and nationalist parties that generally speaks for the Catholic minority in the region and favors closer ties or unification with the Republic of Ireland to the south.

The bombing came hours before the second day of peace talks convened at a government building on the outskirts of Belfast. Before the explosion, it appeared the Ulster Unionist Party, whose participation in the talks is considered crucial, was edging toward the negotiating table. The bombing threw the talks into turmoil and gave the unionists a new reason to delay a decision about when and under what conditions they would take part.

"You have only got to look at Markethill, at the duplicity and the contradictory nature of what the IRA are doing now that they are at the negotiating table, to understand what our difficulties are," said Ken Maginnis, the Ulster Unionist Party's security spokesman.

George Mitchell, the former US Senate majority leader who chairs the peace talks, condemned the attack and said the bombing was clearly designed to blow up the talks as well. "It cannot be permitted to succeed," he said.

Marjorie Mowlam, Britain's Northern Ireland secretary, who was in the middle of delicate negotiations with the Ulster Unionist leadership, said she was "outraged" by acts of "sinister people" who engage in "pointless terrorism."

"It is now time for all those who wish to see a peaceful future to redouble their efforts to get the talks going," she said.

Mitchell convened a brief session Tuesday afternoon, then adjourned for the day. Tuesday night Mowlam met privately with Ulster Unionist leader David Trimble.

The bomb attack produced threats from loyalist paramilitary groups to retaliate, providing further evidence that extremists on both sides of the conflict that has claimed about 3,400 lives in the past 30 years remain vehemently opposed to a peaceful settlement.

But David Ervine, the leader of the Progressive Unionist Party, called on loyalists to "sit back and evaluate" events. His party has been awaiting a decision by Ulster Unionist Party leaders before entering into the talks, but he suggested Tuesday's bombing might not keep them out.

In Markethill, police investigators combed through the debris while shopkeepers inspected damage to their businesses.

A British government spokesman, while condemning the attack, said the facts "have still got to be established before we then move to conclusions" about who was responsible. A television reporter asked him what effect the bomb would have on the peace talks.

Memorial service tonight

A memorial service for Mark Teverovsky, a member of the class of 1999, will be held tonight at 5 p.m. in Balch Arena Theater. Teverovsky, a biology major, was an active member of the theater community at Tufts. He worked on technical direction, lighting, and set design on several shows during his two years at the University, including last year's production of Falsettos. All members of the Tufts community are welcome to attend the service.

Texas professor comes under fire for race comments

College Press Exchange

A University of Texas law professor came under fire from state and school officials Monday for saying that black and Hispanic students cannot compete academically with whites.

Top officials at the state-sponsored university said in a statement they found professor Lino Graglia's remarks "abhorrent" and described them as "an insult to thousands of University of Texas minority students and alumni." But they stopped short of dismissing him, as many minority organizations have demanded.

University of Texas President Peter Flawn told reporters after meeting with Graglia that his comments were under investigation, but that a tenured professor could not be fired simply for making controversial statements.

Graglia said last week "blacks and Mexican-Americans are not academically competitive in selective institutions." He blamed it on their culture, in which he said "failure is not looked upon with disgrace." His comments were made at a news conference announcing the establishment of a student group against affirmative action. Graglia said his statements were not meant to be racist.

Texas Attorney General Dan Morales said on Monday that "Graglia's bigoted generalizations do immeasurable harm to our state's efforts to promote diversity." But he also said the university should use "race-neutral criteria" to encourage minority students to attend the university.

State-owned universities in Texas were forbidden last year from using race-based admission criteria in a decision by the US Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals subsequently upheld by the US Supreme Court. The decision arose from a lawsuit by white students who said they were the victims of discrimination.

The University of Texas said Monday its enrollment for the fall semester was 48,866, up slightly from last year, but that the overall number of black and Hispanic students was down.

Rev. Jesse Jackson, who was in Houston on another matter Monday, said he would speak at a rally against Graglia on Tuesday at the University of Texas.

Lack of faith is not a defect

To the Editor:

I was distressed yesterday to read Scotty McLennan's Viewpoint. ("College is the prime time for spiritual growth," 9/16.) While I don't object to students pursuing their faith in God and beliefs about spirituality, I am deeply offended by the suggestion that my own disbelief may be because I am "stuck at a childish level of spiritual development." If I choose not to believe in God, perhaps it is not simply because I am unconvinced by the idea of "an old man with a beard looking down at us from the sky." I will not take this space to justify my personal opinions on this matter (just as I don't expect others to justify theirs), but I would like to suggest that an individual's lack of faith should hardly be considered a personal defect. There are many people who manage to live fulfilling lives without resorting to a belief in God.

McDonald's doesn't kill

To the Editor:

I found Nate Everett's Viewpoint in yesterday's Daily ("A killer lands in Davis Square," 9/16) condemning McDonald's and the more than 150 million Americans who regularly eat meat to be extraordinarily simplistic in argument and devoid of any common sense.

I certainly feel offended when Everett groups myself and a great percentage of the earth's population in the same category as murderers and rapists. I understand that he may be searching for an issue to believe in and for this I commend him. Vegetarians find it easy to shout from their pulpits of entitlement, yet if we are to truly consider their position we need to ponder the effects of living in a "meat-free planet." We live in a world of rampant starvation and to eliminate meat from the world's food chain would do nothing but increase the number of people inflicted with the poignant pain of hunger.

I am as fond of wildlife as the next person. Yet, we need to understand that animals and human beings are completely different entities and to group them together is to put carrots in the same category as apples. He even has the audacity to compare the consumption of meat to war. Yes, war is not a natural phenomenon, but consumption of animals for food is as natural as the clouds in the sky or the grass underfoot. If we are to truly take your ideas to heart then we must find a way to communicate to all of God's creatures to cease their instinctual desires of hunting for food. If Everett truly wants to make a difference in the world, I suggest he refocus his energies into stopping hunger, instead of advocating a position that will increase it.

Andrew Renzella LA '99

To the Editor:

Concerning the article written by Nate Everett in yesterday's Daily, "A killer lands in Davis Square," this is a complete waste of my time, and whereas I don't disagree with you having an opinion, don't try to enlighten me. I will not sit here and pick at every little detail that did nothing more than make me laugh, but instead I will propose a situation for you.

I will go with you to the midwest and together we will pick out a piece of land. On this land, which we will name "Veggieland," I will give you the title of King Everett, divine vegetable. You will be given gardening tools and you will create a land on which you and your animal friends will live in peace and harmony together.

The only catch is that I will, from time to time, send in someone to hunt one of your animals and eat it for dinner. If he catches the animal and escapes, then he gets to keep it, but, if you catch him in the act, you may beat him with your gardening tools and tell him, "I am King Everett, divine vegetable, ruler of Veggieland and you may not kill my animals," and then lecture him about what McDonald's does to animals and maybe he will end up never coming back.

Most likely he will go somewhere else to look for meat and you will be happy because Veggieland is safe, for the time being. But everyone else in the world will be happy because they are not being harassed and told not to eat meat because "meat eating is morally repugnant."

I'm sure everyone feels that not eating meat will make them a more morally attractive person. I couldn't go on knowing that eating meat was having that kind of effect on me! Wow, look at that, you convinced me and I wasn't even aware of it!

Decision to suspend rugby was based on stereotypical images

To the Editor:

As members of last year's undefeated Championship men's rugby team, we were astounded by the rumors we heard at the end of last year hinting at the fact that rugby would be canceled. We could not imagine that a school which purports to be an institution that cares about its students, could just up and cancel a program that, aside from being immensely successful, is so important to so many. Unfortunately, Tufts was willing to do just that, without even giving the members of the club any chance to address their concerns.

The administration here at Tufts seems to be guilty of an act that is considered a cardinal sin at this school; they have based their knowledge of something on popular stereotypical images. In their ignorance they seem to understand rugby to be a game involving beer drinking, violence, and little else. If the Athletic Committee had taken the time or the effort to include in their meeting someone who had real knowledge of the sport, it would have at least shown an attempt to act responsibly. Unfortunately, however, the University and its Athletic Committee obviously felt they were qualified to make decisions that directly affect the lives of many students, with a minimal knowledge of the issues. With power comes responsibility, and there is little doubt that the Athletic Committee (headed by James Glaser) and the Director of Club Sports, Nancy Bigelow, have not lived up to their responsibilities in this matter.

The situation was bad enough when Tufts just left the rugby team to fend for themselves in a sport where nearly every other school in New England has boosted funding, but with these recent actions the University has stepped over the line of indifference into the realm of active discouragement. The decision to cancel rugby, especially in the way in which it was carried out, shows a total lack of respect for the student athletes and a complete disregard for the maturity and responsibility that should be used when making decisions of this stature.

A tribute to Mark Teverovsky

Mark Teverovsky

Friends share their memories

by TONY KAHN and KATIE HOUSE

Daily Editorial Board

Mark Teverovsky, who would have begun his third year at Tufts this semester, died in late June. An alumnus of Concord-Carlisle High School, Teverovsky was active in both academics and campus activities throughout his two years on the Medford campus.

Teverovsky, a biology major, was a well-known member of Tufts' musical theater group, Torn Ticket II. He did much of the technical work for last fall's production of "Falsettos" and the Parent's Weekend show, "Waltzing DeNiro."

A memorial service will be held this evening in the Balch Arena Theater at 5:00 p.m. The service is a result of joint efforts of students and the chaplaincy, all of whom felt that the Arena Theater would be an appropriate place to have the service, as Teverovsky spent much time there helping to prepare student productions.

Friends of Teverovsky were invited to contribute remembrances to the Daily, which follow.

"The memory of Mark that keeps flashing through my mind is one which I think describes my impression of him best. One night he was driving me back to my dorm. I was upset that night about something insignificant to me now, but troubling at that time. He asked me what was wrong and offered me both a compassionate ear and good advice. That was Mark, always listening, always friendly. He was genuinely sweet. I don't understand what happened. I don't think many people do, and I don't think many of us ever will."

—A friend

"I will remember Mark Teverovsky as the gifted, creative student and the sensitive, compassionate person I got to know in my Scandinavian Literature class. En Garde Eden este — may he be in the Garden of Eden!"

—Gloria Ascher, associate professor of German, Russian, and Asian languages

"Honesty, dedication, hard work, compassion, self-sacrifice — what we seek in life, Mark already revealed. A model before, and a cherished memory after."

—Greg Carleton, asst. professor of Russian

"I thought that I knew Mark very well (or I thought that I knew him better than most people). What makes his death even more shocking to me is the haunting feeling that I really must not have known him well enough. We knew each other since the fall of freshman year and worked closely on "Waltzing DeNiro" last fall; he and I commuted to Tufts from our parents' homes. I hope that the mystery surrounding Mark's death will be somewhat unraveled by the Memorial Service.

I really miss Mark. He seemed to be enjoying his life so much. He was a wonderful friend."

**Offer expires October 30, 1997. No payment of interest will be required for 90 days. Interest accruing during the 90-day period will be added to the principal and will bear interest, which will be included in the repayment schedule. For example, the month of May 5, 1997, had an interest rate of 12.40% with an Annual Percentage Rate (APR) of 13.82%. A monthly payment of $43.30 for the Power Macintosh 6500/250 system is an estimate based on a total loan amount of $2,500, which includes a sample purchase price of $2,341 and a 6% loan origination fee. Interest is variable based on the Prime Rate as reported on the 15th business day of the month in The Wall Street Journal plus a spread of 3.9%. The Apple Computer Loan has an 8-year loan term with no prepayment penalty and is subject to credit approval. Monthly payments may vary depending on actual computer system prices, total loan amounts, state and local sales taxes and a change in the monthly variable interest rate. ©1997 Apple Computer, Inc. ## New club 'breaking' out all over campus

by ALEXIS RIVERA
Daily Editorial Board

Breakdancing, the urban dance move created in the late '70s and early '80s and popularized by rap stars like Kurtis Blow and the Sugarhill Gang, has found an audience at Tufts, thanks to the recent creation of the Tufts University Breakdancing Squad (TUBS). Started by junior Kris Helenek and fellow junior Asad Ghiasuddin, TUBS is a "group that's united in finding ourselves through the music and culture of breakdancing," according to Helenek. TUBS, which started as a joke between Helenek, Ghiasuddin, fellow junior Jessica Normand (current TUBS treasurer), and faculty liaison Kettle Lubin, has now grown to a 40-person club with the first meeting of the year tonight in the Lane Room of the Campus Center at 7 p.m.

Helenek's interest in breakdancing began for two reasons. The first was his older brother Liefin's record collection, which was dominated by the rap music that so many breakers danced to. The second, and for Helenek the most important reason, was an episode of the PBS show "Sesame Street," where several African-Americans illustrated breakdancing to the awe of various Muppets. "It was at that moment," says Helenek, "that I realized the beautiful, powerful effect breakdancing could have on people. It's more than just dancing, it's... breakdancing."

Vinnie Naughty III, a member of the influential New Jersey rap outfit Naughty By Nature and a childhood friend of TUBS co-head Ghiasuddin, was quoted as saying that "breaking is more important than life itself. Why? Well, it's because you never stop, you never rest. In life, you can just float by, but in breaking, you gotta live!"

TUBS is looking for anyone who's interested in breakdancing, or as the flyer states, "If you're down with the electric boogie, the kickworm, and the breaking lifestyle, come." Wednesday's meeting will be special for several reasons: in addition to being the first meeting of the new school year, attendees will also be treated to a screening of the classic documentary "Breaking," and later can join Helenek, Ghiasuddin, and Normand as they journey to the new Davis Square McDonald's to welcome their Golden Arch friends with breakdancing Tufts-style.

Poor song choices for 'Bubs

New album 'id' proves to be a lukewarm release

by ALEXIS RIVERA
Daily Editorial Board

Tufts' male capella group the Beelzebubs has just released a new album entitled id. As a collection of a capella music, it's not too hot, but in terms of your average LP, it's very poor.

The entire world of a capella seems like a rather strange idea. A genre that starts and ends during the college years, the music is far more obscure than trip-hop or indie music in the real world, but at college is more represented than easy English classes or sandals. Usually divided into all-male or all-female (with the occasional coed group), the songs are usually covers of well-worn hits, superstar artists like Peter Gabriel and R.E.M. for the males and the Indigo Girls and Janis Joplin for the females.

A capella music is a difficult, demanding form of music, and the liner note in id that says "every sound on this album is 100 percent vocal, with no drum machines or synthesizers" is as amazing as when you learn that Rage Against the Machine employs no turntables. The Beelzebubs are one of America's finest male capella groups, and the id track "Everybody Hurts" was just chosen by the Contemporary A Capella Society of America (CASA) for its Best of College A Capella album. The Beelzebubs should be very proud of all of these accomplishments, but the fact remains: id is a poor album.

The best song on id is R.E.M.'s "Everybody Hurts," a cover that sticks close to the original and, because of this, works well. Because R.E.M.'s version was so sparse musically to begin with, the instruments can be easily replicated with voices, and soloist Jesse Silver does a good job mimicking Michael Stipe. If nothing else, the track illustrates the fact that the 'Bubs should stick to less challenging songs.

The greatest problem with id is the poor choice of covers on the album. Although the hokiness of Bell Biv DeVoe's "Poison," Aerosmith's "Walk This Way," and Guns N' Roses' "Paradise City" are maybe funny in practice, they really don't work well on record. Elsewhere, the 'Bubs somehow are able to make beautiful songs like Sting's "Fragile" or U2's "Tryin'" to old.

Although the voices of the 'Bubs are generally very strong, they still don't overcome the lack of instruments. Voices can provide beats and rhymes, but they cannot replicate certain emotions that guitars, drums, etc. can produce. The Beatles' "I Am the Walrus" and Guns N' Roses' "Paradise City" are the two best examples of where instruments are needed, with the former's psychedelic guitars and the latter's screeching chords poorly replicated by voices. These two songs also feature the weakest vocals on id, with Andrew Gladstone's Throw Your Arms Around the World" into overly sentimental, emotionally forced numbers. The biggest problem with the song choices, however, are picking bad songs to start with. The terrible "Say Goodbye" by the Dave Matthews Band and Duncan Sheik's trite "Barely Breathing" are just bad choices to start with, and after getting butchered by a bunch of 20-year-olds still going through puberty is beyond even an above-average pain thresh-solo on "Walrus" harder on the ears than Fran Drescher giving birth.

So should you, the typical Tufts capella fan, go out and buy id? Probably not. At best, id is a mediocre album, with only one real highlight. And for you non-capella types, let's just say you've won another battle in the fight against music that sounds like poorly reproduced porno music.

A call to feminist artists

Feminist-minded artists, take note: The National Organization of Women (NOW), Greater Boston Chapter, is currently in the process of coordinating an art exhibit and special accompanying events entitled, REPROspective: Expressions of Choice. This collection is intended to celebrate women's reproductive rights, to commemorate the many who have sacrificed for the battle for reproductive freedom, and to remind the general public that the struggle to gain full reproductive rights is nowhere near finished.

NOW seeks artistic works of all media: art, photos, narrative, as well as historical items (pins, banners, etc.) to be placed on display in conjunction with this exhibit. The exhibit will be featured in the greater Boston area from mid-Dec. 1997 through mid-Jan. 1998. Fortunately, it will be open to the public, and free (always a plus).

For those of you who support this highly worthy cause, you are urged to submit your original work. To enter a work of written or visual art for consideration for inclusion in the exhibit, please send a slide or photograph of the piece (or, for written pieces, obviously, a hard copy of the text) to the NOW office: 971 Commonwealth Ave, Boston, MA, 02215, Attn.: REPROspective. When appropriate, please mat and frame pieces. The deadline for submissions is Oct. 20. Call Nancy Deutsch at (617) 782-1056 with any questions.

Kline gives ins and outs on 'In & Out'

College Press Exchange Kevin Kline's been doing interviews all day long, one after the other, answering every possible query about his latest films, thrown at him by TV and print journalists.

While Kline can easily think of a million other activities he'd rather indulge himself in, he's not averse to facing the media on behalf of a films in which he stars, "In & Out," because of the positive buzz on the film. So it is then, that a tired but relaxed Kline kicks back on a couch at the Regency Hotel in Manhattan to talk. He's by turns serious and sarcastic, focused and distracted, and nothing like his character "In & Out" character.

In the wonderfully risky film, directed by Frank ("Dirty Rotten Scoundrels") Oz and written by Paul Rudnick, Kline stars as Howard, an English teacher at a high school in ultra-conservative Greenleaf, Indiana. Just as the slightly effete Howard prepares to marry his ever-patient fiancée (Joan Cusack), a former student (Matt Dillon) outs him before an audience of millions while accepting a Best Actor statuette at the Oscars. That bombshell rocks everyone, including Howard's parents (Debbie Reynolds and Wilford Brimley) and Howard himself.

Howard's struggle with the notion that he may indeed be gay is complicated by the arrival of the media, who converge on Greenleaf intent on yanking Howard out of the closet, kicking and screaming.

Chief among the journalists is Peter Malloy (Tom Selleck), a ratings-challenged tabloid TV sort with a secret of his own.

Kline notes that the movie, via laughs and without preaching, connects with audiences. And it doesn't seem to matter if it's men or women, heterosexuals or gays, who make up the audience.

"Fear borne of ignorance is a real fear. So, maybe this film will allay some people's fears and misconceptions."

The volleyball team is looking to stifle their opponents during a trip to California this weekend.

Jumbos head to CA looking for first win

by PAULARAMER
Senior Staff Writer

The start of the fall season has been quite disappointing for the women's volleyball team. Through the two matches that have been played, the Jumbos still do not have a win. Despite this, they remain hopeful for solid play in the months to come, and still expect to finish among the best teams in the Northeast.

"It is still very early," remarked Coach Kris Herman. "We're not doing as well as we want to, but we are playing as well as expected this soon in the season. However, that's not good enough."

The Jumbos lost their first match last Tuesday against MIT. Even though they won the first game, 15-12, they could not build from that and lost the next three, 10-15, 12-15, and 3-15. The group was led by juniors Kara Valentine and Angela Yost; each finished with seven kills and 20 digs.

"We just didn't play well. We were out-served, and generally out-played. But we're not going to waste time on the loss," commented Herman.

The women's next match was at the Coast Guard Invitational, where they posted another loss, this time to host school Coast Guard, the best team in the region. "It was a heartbreaking five-set loss, but with the extra week's worth of practice, we played much better than we had against MIT," noted Herman. "We had better passing, ran the offense well, and showed good defense. We played well, but not well enough to win."

Herman continues to have high expectations for her players but knows they need to improve their game. "We need to get fit and pick it up three or four notches. We do have a great combination of older, experienced players and strong freshmen." She partially attributes the group's first two losses to a lack of training, and adds that they need to get in significantly more practice time.

This weekend will bring a trip to California for the Jumbos, as they head to the Pomona-Pitzer Invitational. There they will be playing against Claremont College, UC-Santa Cruz, and Macalester College, among others.

Herman concluded, "We're on the track we need to be to get better. We want to be at our best at the end of the season, not in the first week."

ting out Connecticut College, 2-0, this past Saturday. The game marked the first meeting between the two teams since their tournament semi-final showdown at the end of last season, in which Tufts also emerged victorious by shut-out.

The Jumbos were dominant from the start, tallying 19 first-half shots to the Camels' two, and ten first-half corners to the Camels' one. Andrea Edelstein led the offensive barrage, posting eight first-half shots, while offensive star of the game Kate Mathey had four.

Forward Robyn Gawlak put Tufts on the board for the first time this season when she darted out from the corner with the ball, cut across the middle and slapped it past Camels' goalie Claudia Goodrich with 16:46 remaining. It was all the Jumbos would need.

Tufts' second goal was a captain-to-captain connection when Mathey took a pass from midfielder Jessica MacLellan and put one of her six second-half shots home.

"I thought it was a terrific first win," coach Carol Rappoli said. "We have so many new players, and we still have some questions to be answered, but this group came together today."

Regardless, it was a win, the Jumbos' first win of the season, and Rappoli's 100th career coaching victory at Tufts. The coach, however, seemed unconcerned about her accomplishment, or that she is the field hockey coach with the most wins in Tufts history, for she continued, "People played significant roles who didn't play much last year."

Rappoli was referring to goalie Lindsay Shell, who played in just two games last year, sophomore defenseman Rebecca Litt and junior defensive star of the game Jenn Martin, both of whom contributed to a stonewall defense that only allowed five shots to get through to Shell in the game.

"I thought Jenn Martin played the game of her life," MacLellan said. "She was like a wall."

MacLellan herself played a game that was admired by her coaches.

"Jessica played exceptionally well," Assistant coach Laurel Manzelli said. "She was everywhere."

The Jumbos' upcoming schedule includes a five-game road trip in which they visit Bentley, Colby, Wellesley, Bates, and Worcester Polytechnic Institute. They will return to the Hill on October 4th to face Bowdoin, kicking off a homestand in which they will play six of seven at home.

"I think the kids played great in this unseasonable heat," Manzelli said. "We have stuff to work on, but they looked pretty good for the first game."

Concluded Rappoli, "I didn't realize how dominant we would be." They hope to continue their dominant play as they leave the friendly confines of the Hill.

In Davis Cup, it is pay for play

Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Having tried everything to compel American tennis players to participate in the venerable Davis Cup competition — including appealing to their recessive patriotism — officials at the US Tennis Association finally opted for the direct approach. They got out their checkbooks.

American players who represent their country in the international competition this year have had their pay quadrupled — from $25,000 per round to $100,000. Whether for money or country, the event has drawn the participation of the top two players in the world — No. 1 Pete Sampras and No. 2 Michael Chang, who will play singles matches Friday against No. 3 Patrick Rafter and No. 21 Mark Philippoussis of Australia in the Davis Cup semifinal at Washington, D.C.

Sweden plays host to Italy in the other semifinal this weekend, with the semifinal winners to meet Nov. 28-30 in the final.

Money may not be the motivation for multimillionaires such as Sampras and Chang, but to the USTA, which will provide it, the raise is intended as a gesture. It almost certainly makes the US Davis Cup team currently the highest paid in the world.

In singles, US players are paid $100,000 for each round they play. If a player participates in three Davis Cup rounds in a year, he receives a $100,000 bonus. Doubles players are paid $50,000 per round, with a bonus for playing three rounds.

Each player may designate a charity or foundation, usually his own, to which the USTA directly pays the first $25,000.

Competitors in the Ryder Cup, golf's top international team competition, do not get paid. The Ryder Cup, which pits a team of US golfers against a team of Europeans, is held every two years, and will take place this weekend in Sotogrande, Spain.

According to a US Tennis Association official who spoke on condition of anonymity, the impetus for the pay raise did not come from the players.

"Money has never been an issue with the players, it really hasn't," the official said. "We did institute the charity payments at the request of the players, though. All of them wanted that and we responded."

To the chagrin of US and international tennis officials, it always seems to be the Americans who are reluctant to represent their country in the nearly century-old Davis Cup competition. With a few exceptions, players around the world are flattered and excited about Davis Cup.

Not so here. Sampras usually plays, but only in the later rounds. Chang played once last year and was not expected to play this year. Andre Agassi played in the second round against the Netherlands but was not selected for the match against Australia.

Players frequently cite tennis' cramped schedule as the reason they have difficulty participating, yet through mutual agreement with all parties, the professional tour shuts down during the four Davis Cup weeks throughout the year so that there are no conflicting tournaments.

Davis Cup payouts are a closely kept secret. By all available best estimates, the US team's opponents, the Australians, are paid $20,000 each. Most successful tennis nations are likely near that figure.

Clinton salutes CIA on its 50th

Los Angeles Times-Washington
Post News Service

WASHINGTON—Saluting the Central Intelligence Agency on its 50th anniversary, President Clinton traveled to the agency's Langley campus Tuesday to praise its employees as people who "stood on the front lines of democracy's struggle" during the Cold War but whose clandestine methods assure that most of their deeds remain uncelebrated.

"By necessity, the American people will never know the full story of your courage," Clinton said. "You labor in obscurity by choice and design, serving with quiet patriotism that seeks neither spotlight nor praise."

Photographers and television crews covering Clinton's appearance were instructed by the CIA not to take pictures of the audience of about 3,000 employees who listened to the speech under a white party tent. Afterward, Clinton toured an exhibit filled with gadgetry from the espionage wars, including a KGB "lipstick pistol" taken from the purse of an East German spy and a cigarette pack which, according to display notes, sprays "deadly cyanide gas into the victim's face."

These artifacts were standard fare during the Cold War, an era from which critics say the CIA has yet to fully emerge. CIA analysts failed to forecast the Soviet Union's collapse, and some on Capitol Hill have questioned whether the agency, which has an estimated 16,000 employees, has adequately redefined its mission for a new era.

But Clinton said he and CIA leaders are working on ways to ensure the agency remains relevant, in part by combatting "new transnational threats such as drug traffickers, terrorists, organized criminals and weapons of mass destruction."

Clinton also suggested the agency must continue devising new methods of surveillance and detection. "Targeted and timely intelligence in some places is more difficult to collect than ever," he said. "In today's high-tech information age, the haystacks are getting bigger, but the size of the needles isn't."

CIA director George J. Tenet introduced Clinton with ribbing about the first briefings the agency gave him after the 1992 elections, when CIA employees "set up shop at the Comfort Inn in Little Rock, Arkansas."

"We paid nearly $39 a night for those rooms and they were worth every penny," said Tenet. "From those first briefings you made clear to us your strong support for your intelligence community."

But Clinton has had his problems getting comfortable with the CIA. His first director, James Woolsey, differed with White House officials before leaving the job. Clinton nominated retired Air Force Gen. Michael P.C. Carns to be the replacement, but he withdrew amid controversy in his personal life. Former Deputy Defense Secretary John M. Deutch took over instead, but he made it clear that he was never particularly happy in the job, and left at the end of the first term.

Clinton at first wanted former National Security Adviser Anthony Lake to be his second term CIA director, but Lake withdrew his nomination after stiff opposition from some Republican senators. The job then went to Tenet.

Despite the rocky history, Clinton was received warmly Tuesday. He was interrupted by applause when he took note of the recent arrest by FBI agents, with critical CIA support, of Mir Aimal Kansi, the Pakistani suspected of a killing two CIA employees and wounding three others in a shooting spree outside the agency's main gate in 1993.

And Donna MacEwen, a 36-year-old CIA lawyer, said she was happy to see presidential recognition for an agency that generally operates in the shadows. She said she can't even discuss the particulars of her work with her family or her husband, a musician. While this makes for some awkward moments, she said, "Everyone understands the position you are in."

29 children dead after truck topples

Los Angeles Times-Washington
Post News Service

CAIRO, Egypt—A truck carrying up to 120 girls and boys to harvest cotton on a state-owned farm overturned and toppled into a canal Tuesday, killing 29 of the young laborers as rescuers tried in vain to save them, police and hospital officials said.

More than 50 children were injured, two critically.

The accident, on a bumpy dirt road 75 miles north of Cairo, underscored the sensitive issue of child labor in Egypt, where according to some estimates as many as 12 million children are put to work, mainly in agriculture.

The children were crowded on the back of an open truck traveling near the village of Masheer at midmorning when the driver lost control, spilling the truck and his passengers into one of the steep-banked drainage canals that criss-cross the rich croplands of the Nile Delta.

Villagers jumped into the waterway to try to save the children and were able to pull several from the truck. Many were trapped, however, and quickly drowned.

The driver, who was uninjured, was being questioned by police. The truck belonged to Egypt's Agriculture Ministry, and the fields where the victims were to work are government-owned, the Interior Ministry said, according to wire services.

While a police report said the youngest child killed was 14, shaken physicians at the hospital where the victims were taken said that at least two of them were only 11.

"The accident was horrible. There wasn't much for us to do," said Dr. Abdulla Amer, deputy director of the Kafrel-Sheikh General Hospital, who said he could not recall such a devastating road accident involving young workers.

According to UNICEF, 250 million children between the ages of 5 and 14 are working in developing countries around the world.

Labor attacks trade

Los Angeles Times-Washington
Post News Service

WASHINGTON—Organized labor launched an all-out political attack Tuesday against President Clinton's request for "fast track" legislative authority to negotiate an expansion of the North American Free Trade Agreement and future trade deals.

AFL-CIO President John J. Sweeney announced an ad campaign aimed at 13 individual congressional districts and the entire state of California as the first step in a multimillion-dollar media effort. The majority of the districts are held by House members who are undecided on the Clinton bill and have large labor constituencies, he said.

"We're committed to waging this campaign for as long as it takes with all the resources we have," Sweeney said.

"Fast track" authority would allow the president to negotiate trade agreements that Congress could approve or disapprove, but not amend. Labor had insisted that the president's bill include language that would require any trade agreements to include certain labor and environmental standards for the nation's trading partners. Without them, labor fears that companies in other countries with lower standards - for example lower wages, fewer worker protections or weaker environmental regulations than in the United States - would be able to produce goods more cheaply than US firms, making them formidable competitors, which would lower US wages or even cost US jobs.

Sweeney said the president's proposal was unacceptable to labor, but held out the possibility of a compromise on the labor and environmental issues.

Asked if he thought labor could win the fast track fight, Sweeney said "of course, what the hell do you think we're doing this for?"

AFL-CIO officials said the media effort would cost $1 million in the first week. They said the unions would spread the lobbying to other congressional districts in the weeks ahead.

US sees gains by Mexico in the war on drugs

Los Angeles Times-Washington
Post News Service

WASHINGTON—Barry McCaffrey, the Clinton administration's national drug control policy director, said Tuesday that Mexico has made great strides in fighting drug trafficking and related corruption and that the United States will pursue a policy of "cooperation, not confrontation," with its southern neighbor.

McCaffrey, in a report to Congress, said Mexico has made significant progress in reforming its notoriously inefficient judicial system and is creating specially screened anti-narcotics units that would be less susceptible to corruption.

"The bottom line is... we have a serious, major partnership with Mexico," McCaffrey told a news conference. "They are sick of the violence, the corruption and the threat to their own institutions and so are we and we are going to work together."

McCaffrey's report comes six months after the administration certified Mexico as a full partner in the war on drugs, a move that sparked controversy because of scandals that exposed drug corruption at the highest level of the Mexican police and army. Shortly before the decision to certify Mexico was announced in March, the army general who served as head of the country's top anti-narcotics force was arrested on suspicion of being on the payroll of a major drug trafficker.

To stave off what promised to be a bruising congressional debate over the certification decision, the White House agreed McCaffrey's Office of National Drug Control Policy would provide an update on Mexico's anti-drug efforts after six months.

Since then, more corruption cases and violence among Mexico's top drug trafficking organization have raised further concerns about the country's ability to curtail a drug trade that has had devastating effects on both sides of the US-Mexican border. About 70 percent of the cocaine consumed in the United States flows through Mexico.

Of particular concern to US officials has been a trend by Mexican judges to dismiss charges and convictions against some of the country's top kingpins, while others continue to run their criminal empires from prison. Arrests and allegations appear to indicate continuing links between the Mexican military and the drug traffickers.

In a statement, Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., a leading critic of Mexico's certification who was briefed by McCaffrey Tuesday morning, called the report "at best, a mixed bag."

While acknowledging some progress, Feinstein said the "overall tone of the report is infused with a sense of optimism that Mexico... is finally on the road to defeating its drug-trafficking problem. That strikes me as unduly optimistic... I strongly caution against drawing sweeping conclusions from a handful of positive indications."

McCaffrey pointed out Mexico has enacted tough new money-laundering laws, increased cocaine seizures and created a new unit of carefully selected police to form a new anti-narcotics unit. He said two of the five main Mexican trafficking cartels were dismantled in recent months and the others are under increasing police pressure.

While praising the government of President Ernesto Zedillo for its efforts to root out the influence of drug traffickers, the report acknowledged some law enforcement cooperation is "constrained by a lack of mutual trust."

"Mexican counter-drug authorities face an uphill struggle against widespread corruption," the report said.

Despite the report's assertion that the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) has a good working relationship with Mexican authorities, however, law enforcement officials said privately that they are reluctant to share virtually any sensitive information with their Mexican counterparts.

Join the Daily

Today is the start of what should be the best four years of your life. Don't waste any time. Over the next four years you will learn, mature, meet influential people, and have fun. All of these can be done by joining The Tufts Daily. Tufts is the smallest college in the country with a daily paper, so we need all the help we can get. You can write, take pictures, edit, or help with the business or production of the paper. Call x3090, or email tdaily@emerald.tufts.edu. It's just that easy. You won't regret it. NO EXPERIENCE NECESSARY

Ad Council

Thanks to you, all sorts of everyday products are being made from the paper, plastic, metal and glass that you've been recycling.

But to keep recycling working to help protect the environment, you need to buy those products.

BUY RECYCLED.

AND SAVE.

So look for products made from recycled materials, and buy them. It would mean the world to all of us.
