Race Relations Committee Holds Forum To Discuss Issue

Students Evaluate Race Relations at Forum Last Night

Over 100 Attend

by Anthony Everett

The recently formed Race Relations Committee sponsored a Race Relations Forum on Sunday in which students were invited to attend an informal meeting to discuss the problem of race relations at Tufts.

Phil Swain, Chairman of the Senate and one of the members of the Committee, began the Forum by expressing their gratitude for the large turnout (approximately 150 students attended the meeting). Swain then introduced Jim Vance, a member of the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination, who was the only formal guest speaker at the meeting.

Vance, who was a race specialist in the military, began by drawing a distinction between prejudice and discrimination. "Prejudice is a state of mind," he said, "whereas discrimination is a form of action." He added that prejudice means to pre-judge something while "to discriminate means to act" on their judgement.

Vance maintained that in order to get ahead and obtain power in our society we must conform to certain "norms." However, he noted that the norms established by our society do not ade-

A statement issued by the recently formed Tufts Race Relations Committee states: "The basic purposes of the committee are to address the issue of racism and to improve race relations on campus through awareness, education, and sharing."

A strong first step was taken in that direction

September Assault Trials To Be Held Tomorrow

The five men accused of assaulting five Tufts students early this semester are scheduled to start trial tomorrow at the Somerville District Court. The trial, which was originally scheduled for October 22, was postponed until tomorrow at the request of the defense.

According to Assistant District Attorney Neal Hestab, the defense made the request for a continuance after one suspect was hospitalized following an automobile accident.

The assault, which occurred September 10, marked the first time that university students positively identified their assailants and were willing to press charges.

as a result of the incident experienced a memory loss spanning one hour before and after the incident.

The five suspects face a sentence ranging from ten years in a state institution or $1000 fine and/or two-and-a-half years in prison.

From the statements of the alleged assailants, Campus Police have reason to believe that there was a sixth student assaulted. That assault, however, went unreported.

preceded by a short talk on prejudice and discrimination by James Vance, a public employment consultant for the Massachusetts Commission Against Racism. Mr. Vance is also the father of Race Relations Committee member and Afro-American Society Treasurer, Michael Vance.

Mr. Vance came to the Forum not as a speaker but as an initiator of discussion. He said he had mixed feelings about speaking at all at Tufts in light of recent racial flareups at Williams College. Mr. Vance explained the absence of a speech: "I didn't come tonight with anything prepared. I don't know where this group is going. I do not know where you want to go."

Where the assembly of Blacks, Whites, Asians, and Hispanics "was going" remained to be seen. The discussion opened to comments by students on the causes of prejudice and discrimination and how the

The First Step

The Race Relations Forum Sunday night was the first step toward easing some of the inter-race problems at Tufts. Sponsored by the Race Relations Committee, the intention of the forum was to educate students about existing racial conflicts and misunderstandings, and to allow students to express their personal experiences. While both of these objectives were accomplished, we should be careful to remember that the forum was not the end of the need for inter-racial awareness at this university, it was merely the first step toward understanding one another.

This point was addressed at the meeting but no solution or next step was planned. We should not believe that the solution will be easily achieved, but it is necessary to recognize that the next step must be taken while the effects of the forum are prevalent. It is incumbent upon everyone who attended the forum to help take that next step by utilizing the information from the forum to ease any tensions one comes across. However, the 150 students who attended the forum represent only 3 percent of the student body. So there must be a second significant step toward inter-racial activity if we are to solve our problem— and that step must start within each individual at Tufts, not just those who attended the forum.

From time to time comments from the editors will appear under the staff-head when issues warrant attention. The editorials reflect the majority opinion of the editorial board. As well, letters to the editor and essay-style contributions will be published that do not reflect the opinions of the entire editorial board.

quately represent the various cultures that make it up. Therefore, minority cultures (i.e. blacks, hispanics, asians) must compromise their culture in order to conform and succeed in our society.

Vance also pointed out that it is the superior attitude of a small part of our country's population that forces segregation and fosters a lack of understanding between cultures. This ignorance further increases the power differential and thus increases the control of the ruling class.

Vance stressed that we must fight this "vicious circle" by attacking it where there is a lack of understanding. He urged that various cultures must learn to understand, not fear, each other.

After Vance finished, the floor was opened to discussion and students tried to apply some of Vance's theories to the Tufts community. Two of the topics most commonly mentioned were: 1) do separate orientation weeks foster alienation of minority cultures and lead to segregation and 2) are the culture houses places where individuals of a certain culture can meet and discuss common interests or are they segregating the Tufts Community.

Most students present felt that separate orientation weeks were a good idea because of certain problems that are unique to various cultures and require a more direct orientation. Members of both the Asian house and the Afro-American Society stressed that culture houses are open to all members of the Tufts Community and urged that anyone who wishes to learn more about the Asian or Afro-American cultures should feel free to stop by.

Although no major decisions were made as to how to improve race relations at Tufts, the Forum allowed members of the race relations committee to hear many new perspectives concerning the present status of race relations at Tufts.

In Senate business conducted before the Forum, the Senate tabled a motion to give the Women's Center funds for support of the ERA. The motion was tabled because the Senate thought the topic warranted further review and they did not want to rush an important decision through the abbreviated meeting before the race relations forum.

'Chicken Legs Satisfy Hungry 'Feat' Fans

by Peter Vilain

The advertising for "Chicken Legs" was alluring: four former members of "Little Feat," together in the same band. Many of those who flocked to the Channel Thursday night were probably hoping for a healthy dose of old "Little Feat" tunes. In the end, they got some of what they wanted, in addition to a top-notch opening act.

"The Nighthawks" kicked off the show with fast hard-driving blues that got the crowd on its feet early. The band, a guitarist, bassist, drummer and harmonica player, laid down tight, well-paced numbers with refreshing energy. The four musicians traded vocals, each adding a distinctive touch to their numbers. The huge crowd at the Channel was soon rocking out with total abandon and the band had no trouble initiating a sing-along on one of their more feverish tunes. By the time they played their encore of "whole lotta shakin' going on," the "Nighthawks" had won the crowd, leaving

"Chicken Legs" with a tough act to follow.

As "Chicken Legs" took the stage, the crowd seemed a little hesitant, not quite sure what to expect. Former "Little Feat" members, Paul Banere, Richie Hayward, Kenny Gradney and Sam Clayton, were joined by Catfish Hodge on guitar and vocals, Mitch Collins on piano and Dixie D. Ballin on vocals. Surprisingly, Hodge dominated the sound early, with the others backing him up on solid rock tunes. Focal point Hodge, in much the same way Lowell George had done with "Little Feat" talked with the crowd and sang soulfully, Marty Feldman-like eyes bulging.

With "Old Folks Boogie," Barrere took over the vocals. The crowd was ecstatic over the evening's first "Little Feat" number. Here the rhythm section of Hayward, Clayton and Gradney played more in their distinctive style—looser and funkier than on the "Chicken Legs" tunes.

It's easy to recognize the distinctive sound of Gradney, Clayton, Hayward and Banere, but to compare "Chicken Legs" to "Little Feat" would be a big mistake: Lowell George is irreplaceable and keyboardist Bill was also a major part of the "Little Feat" sound. Besides, judging from the cryptic remarks made about Lowell George, it seems the ex-Feat members are having a hard enough time adjusting to their new roles.

Despite a seeming lack of direction, the crowd was willing to forget what "Chicken Legs" was not, and by the end of the night their new tunes were receiving almost the same applause as the occasional "Little Feat" songs. Still, it seems that "Chicken Legs" present and future appeal remains linked to the "Little Feat" fans' desire to hear the old tunes one more time.

Forum might begin to overcome these problems as they exist at Tufts. Lack of minority representation in the TCU Senate and on the staff of the Observer were cited as examples of the racial imbalance in various sectors of the University.

But upon whom does the responsibility lie to attain a balance? It was pointed out that The Observer, as representative of the University has a duty to look for fairness and equal representation but at the same time, the minority student has an equal responsibility to work toward racial balance.

Responding to an earlier comment that minorities must enter the professions and hence, the mainstream of American life, Clifford Char, a member of the Race Relations Committee, stated that it wasn't always that easy to do. Minorities encounter unique problems that often impede such progress. Earlier, Mr. Vance had expressed this sentiment, drawing a "ladder of success" and explaining "for some people, the rungs are a lot steeper."

It was conceded by most that minorities do have unique problems, but how are these to be handled? Culture houses and special programs such as "Black Orientation Week" do help the student deal with the problems he will face as a minority at Tufts, but, at the same time, do they promote segregation, and subsequently a lack of communication between the races?

These issues and several others were vigorously debated throughout the two-hour session and needless to say, no firm conclusions were reached. One hundred and fifty persons assembled in the Coolidge Room because they are concerned about race relations at Tufts. Throughout the evening people aired their views, related their experiences and opened themselves up so that others might understand a little better.

One student explained that it's often hard to know how people of other races view you. "Are they wondering the same thing that I am? I want to say 'Hey, I'm open! I'm cool.'" The Race Relations Forum was an evening of issues of controversial questions that remain unanswered but they weren't questions that fell on deaf ears.

Toward the end of the evening someone asked, "Are you content or will you act to change things?" If Sunday evening is any indication, an admirable number of Tufts students are not satisfied and will continue to strive for awareness, education, and sharing.
