Gittleman among top candidates for Brandeis presidency

by PATRICK HEALY
Daily Editorial Board

The Brandeis University presidential search committee expects to have a new president by June and continues to consider Tufts Provost Sol Gittleman for the position, according to a recent article in the Justice, the Brandeis student newspaper. The article said that the committee has reviewed approximately 100 resumes and has shortened the applicant pool to a list of 20 candidates.

Although search committee Co-chair Malcolm Sherman said the names of the presidential candidates are officially confidential, a Dec. 25 article in The Boston Globe, containing a short list of candidates for the position, named Gittleman as one of two top choices for the presidency.

Independent sources in the Brandeis administration have confirmed the short list, which one official said has been further narrowed to three names, according to the article in the Justice. One Brandeis official said he thought the list has been reduced to include only Gittleman, Brooklyn College President Robert E. Hess and Columbia University Professor Robert E. Pollack.

Student admits to sexual misconduct

by JANINE BILLY
Daily Editorial Board

A Tufts student accused of sexual misconduct stemming from an incident of "unwanted touching" at the beginning of the year has been put on second level disciplinary probation, according to Associate Dean of Students Bruce Reitman.

Reitman said a female Tufts student reported that a male Tufts student, whom she knew, started making sexual advances and would not stop when she requested that he do so. Reitman said, however, "There was no rape."

According to Reitman, the male student admitted to the sexual misconduct, and both parties requested that the Dean of Students handle the disciplinary problem instead of holding a hearing. Reitman said that he has been acting as a mediator between the two parties.

The assailant has willingly left the residence hall where both he and the victim lived and has sacrificed all visiting rights to the dormitory. Reitman said that because the incident was traumatic and "very painful" for the victim she does not want to see the assailant again.

Reitman is pleased that the disciplinary action was decided upon through "mediation rather than confrontation."

Religious studies may be expanded

by PATRICK HEALY
Daily Editorial Board

The recommendations to expand and enhance religious studies at Tufts made in the recently completed Lilly Endowment Study Report are currently being considered by Acting Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Sciences Mary Ella Feinleib.

The report, which examines the status and future of the Tufts religious studies department, recommends continued independence and "modest expansion" of the religion department, according to study group convener and music professor Mark DeVoto. The report comes almost three months after the religion department narrowly escaped losing departmental status in the proposed fiscal 1992 budget cuts released Nov. 14.

The position of part-time secretary for the religion department is still expected to be cut in the final budget. Although another early proposal had slated the department for consolidation with another in order to help balance the budget, Feinleib said last night that religious studies will "certainly continue to remain an independent department through next year."

"I have reviewed the report briefly and I know what in essence it recommends. It looks as though the committee took its job very seriously and did well with its recommendations. We have to consider it and consider our response," Feinleib said.

Feinleib said she does not believe she could take "major action" on the recommendations, although she could forward her recommendations to the other deans and University President Mayer. She said the next academic vice-president will have the authority to act on the recommendations made by the report.

"When it comes to major changes, they will start in the fiscal 1993 budget. There will be more permanent decisions made by the head of Arts and Sciences. It is very unlikely for major decisions to be made beforehand," Feinleib said.

Mayer said last semester that concerns about the quality of the department were the motivating factor in the proposed budget cuts in the department and not financial factors, as Feinleib had stated.

A search is currently being conducted to replace former Academic Vice-President Robert I. Rotberg, who left Tufts last spring to assume the presidency of Lafayette College.

Associate Dean of Liberal Arts Christopher Gray said yesterday the report included "how the religion major should be shaped and how religion courses should be located." He said the report should be forwarded to Mayer and the Lilly Endowment next week and will be studied by the senior Arts and Sciences administration during the upcoming weeks.

Ethics Committee split over the Keating Five

WASHINGTON (AP) -- The Senate Ethics Committee is caught in a partisan split over how to treat four of the five senators who intervened with thrift regulators on behalf of political donor and S&L operator Charles H. Keating Jr., congressional sources said Thursday night.

The three Republicans on the six-member committee favor dismissing Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, and John McCain, R-Ariz., from the case, the sources said. This was a proposal made last September by committee special counsel Robert S. Bennett, who reportedly told the committee there wasn't any evidence that Glenn and McCain broke any rules.

But the sources, who disclosed the split on condition of anonymity, said the three Democrats want basically the same treatment for Glenn, McCain and Sens. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., and Donald W. Riegle Jr., D-Mich.

Under the Democrats' package approach, the four senators would receive letters criticizing their assistance for Keating. The letters need not find a violation of standards of conduct and would be tailored to each individual's behavior.

The case of the fifth member of the Keating Five, Alan Cranston, D-Calif., is not part of the dispute, the sources said. The sources said committee members consider the case against Cranston a strong one that could result in a recommendation for Senate punishment.

The Ethics Committee began deliberations on the Keating Five last Wednesday. On Thursday, the members recessed until Feb. 19.

A committee source said after Thursday's meeting the committee was not hopelessly deadlocked.

"There's been some narrowing of differences and when we get back we ought to be able to reach some conclusions," he said.

The committee source said the panel "has started to come together" but has "not entirely" agreed.

The Democrats are Chairman Howell Heflin of Alabama, David Pryor of Arkansas and Terry Sanford of North Carolina. The Republicans are Vice Chairman Warren Rudman of New Hampshire, Trent Lott of Mississippi and Jesse Helms of North Carolina.

If Riegle and DeConcini were left in the case to be criticized, the committee would have two basic options: send a letter of rebuke or recommend a censure on the Senate floor.

Before sending a case to the full Senate, the committee must provide a statement of alleged violations and give the senator charged a chance to respond.

Heated debate over a resolution occurs at Medford Council meeting

by MAUREEN LENIHAN
Contributing Writer

The Medford City Council meeting Tuesday night was dominated by emotional debate concerning the Council's Jan. 29 resolution urging local congressmen to support the elimination of all federal grants, loans, and subsidies to persons convicted of protesting the Persian Gulf War.

The resolution, passed last week by the Council by a 5-2 vote, was brought back onto the agenda by members of the Mystic Valley Peace Action Group who felt that the resolution inhibits the principles of the First Amendment.

After the MVPAG presented a formal statement of opposition to the Council, the floor opened to an hour and 30 minutes of informal statements made by concerned citizens. In addition to Medford residents, 11 Tufts students were in attendance at the meeting.

The MVPAG statement, read by member James Owens, reflected the views of a majority of the citizens present. It reiterated the First Amendment, which "guarantees the right of the people to assemble and petition the government for redress of grievances." The MVPAG believes that "We [must] be particularly vigilant in protecting the rights of the citizens to express their views even if those views are unpopular at home."

Following the statement,

Sophomore Nick Jehlen said the resolution shows "severe bias."

MVPAG members gave the seven Council members copies of the Bill of Rights tied with yellow ribbons. The ribbons are a symbol of support for the US troops in the Persian Gulf.

"I challenge anyone in that audience to prove that I am taking away their First Amendment rights," said Councilor Fran Giordano. He told the onlookers that "[You] have the right to protest anytime, anywhere, but do it within the parameter of the law."

Giordano ended by emphatically announcing, "I will never reconsider my motion to move this resolution."

Many of the students and citizens felt that the resolution conveyed an intimidating message to the Medford Community.

"The Council is telling citizens that they should not think and express their views," said citizen Allen Ruttenburg.

Reverend Scott James added, "Freedom is a very precious gift and is one of the main reasons that our troops are in the Middle East."

"I do not think that we were thinking about intimidation, but rather that we were thinking about the physical constraints as in costs," said Councilor Patricia Dougherty. She agreed with Giordano, who believes that taxpayers should not have to bear the financial burden of consequences incurred by protesting such as overtime pay for police officers.

Some Tufts students present inquired about the wording and

Student finds little support after affront

To the Editor:

I was sexually harassed in the reference area of Wessell library on Tuesday around 8:00 p.m. A young male sat near me, kept watching me, and fondled his groin area. After considering the situation, I stood up, looked at him, and said loudly, "Get out of here now! I don't ever want you in here harassing again!" He gathered his stuff and left very quickly. I looked around and realized that none of the students around me were willing to respond at all. I got up to follow him out of the library, and stopped at the security desk to tell the guard what happened. The campus police were called; they responded quickly and took a report.

I know that this sort of thing occurs frequently on campus. I was in a safe place and in a mind-set that I could do something about it. I want to let it be known by other women that I felt greatly empowered and like I was able to do something. I have been in similar situations in parks and subways where I was alone or felt unsafe and I wasn't able to respond. At these times, I left the situations feeling intruded upon and powerless.

I have a couple of complaints about how the students, library and police handled this. First, none of my peers who observed what occurred made any attempt to do anything or even acknowledge my position. Secondly, when I reported to the security desk in the library, the security guard was completely unprepared to deal with the situation. And thirdly, the police did not in any way attempt to put me in touch with support organizations equipped to handle this type of destructive affront.

I am terrified at the inability of the institutions to deal with a victim of sexual harassment and rape. My incident was minor and so it should have been easily attended to. I am scared for the victims of more violent assaults. Such a minor incident is still occupying my thoughts the next morning. I ask my male peers: How am I supposed to study, last night or this morning?

One of the librarians was helpful and attentive to the fact that I might be a little shaken up. She made her presence available to me. I thank her.

This type of incident occurs frequently in various degrees of severity. Every incident is destructive to the woman against whom it is directed and to the safety and freedom of the women's community in general. The institutions that are supposed to handle such incidents are not responsive to us victims. There are other organizations that are supportive and facilitate constructive responses to such destructive behavior.

Triple standards?

To the Editor:

Would Professor Stephen Bailey congratulate me if I were to publicly hang posters showing one person sensually licking another's exposed sexual organ? To determine if my action was another of the "inconsistencies of a homophobic society" or an action worthy of his praise, Bailey would have to know two things: the gender of the people in the poster and my sexual preferences. Such knowledge is crucial to Bailey's double standard.

The Pachyderm's sexual harassment policy decrees that actions "calculated to annoy, embarrass, or distress are harassing behaviors, are prohibited, and are subject to disciplinary action..." Love it or hate it, this must apply equally to the entire Tufts community, even those sectors suffering discrimination. Tufts needs increased awareness that all are worthy of equal respect. Tufts must not excuse or approve illegal actions of "the oppressed" and congratulate by the "politically correct" in the name of "progress." Social marxism we can do without.

If QUEER's goal was to damage their image and foment hostility, they achieved it. If Bailey sought to promote hypocrisy and disregard for University guidelines, he has met with equal success. I congratulate both.

The legal argument

To the Editor:

I find the Administration's determination to tear down the QUEER posters to have been an extremely poor decision. What the Administration again failed to do was look up the law of the land before making a freedom of speech decision.

Now I do realize, that as freedom of speech goes, there have been exceptions made to the First Amendment of the US Constitution. I also understand that one of those exceptions includes pornography and obscenity. Professor Stephen Bailey's letter, however, stated generally that the Supreme Court has found such "QUEER posters" legal according to the constitution. He failed, of no fault of his own, to back up this conclusion with concrete facts. Thus, in attempting to end this debate over the QUEER posters before another campus controversy begins, I would like to quote the Miller v. California (1973) US Supreme Court case which, go figure, defined obscenity. Pornography as a side note, is a sub-category of obscenity. According to the Supreme Court, all three of the following facts must be valid for the material, action, etc. to be defined as obscene.

"The basic guidelines for the trier of the fact must be: (a) whether the 'average person, applying contemporary community standards' would find that the work, taken as a whole, appeals to the prurient interest, (b) whether the work depicts or describes, in a patently offensive way, sexual conduct specifically defined by the applicable state law, and (c) whether the work, taken as a whole, lacks serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value."

As for the first two parts of the definition of obscenity, I will not make a judgement. For one thing, I don't really know what turns people on. Heck, I'm pretty naive when it comes to the first piece. As for the second part, I don't know what the current state law is in regards to the QUEER posters. As for the third part, though, there is no question. There was a serious political value to the posters, dealing with the frustrations of homosexuals and bisexuals at Tufts and our country.

Some may argue that the posters should have been torn down with accordance to Tufts Community Union Judiciary poster policy guidelines. In part, I can see the point to this argument. The posters did not have a contact person or a phone number on them, and thus, violated the TCUJ policy. Yet, I think we all know the poster policy isn't exactly stringently enforced. I highly doubt that the QUEER posters were the first posters at Tufts to not have a contact name on them, and yet, the Administration decided this time to follow the poster policy. Go figure.

Like most Tufts student, I do not happen to agree with the method QUEER used to identify their political agenda. I do not see how anyone will sympathize with those involved with QUEER after seeing the posters. Yet, as I've said before, the posters may have been immoral, but they were not illegal. I have attempted to show this not through emotion, but instead by taking a proactive, legal stance. It is too bad the Administration has never made a conscious effort to do the same.

AWOL guardsmen return to Fort Hood saying they have accomplished their goal

KILLEEN, Texas (AP) -- Louisiana National Guardsmen, some of whom had been absent without leave, began returning to Fort Hood Thursday, some saying they had accomplished their goal of drawing attention to conditions at the Army post.

Guard commanders, meanwhile, said they had blocked an attempt by others to charter buses and join the exodus from the fort.

Sixty-seven members of the 4,387-person 256th Infantry Brigade had left the central Texas post by Wednesday, Brig. Gen. Gary Whipple said Thursday.

Forty of them were declared absent without leave, 27 others had one-day passes. An Army spokesman had reported Wednesday that 90 soldiers had 24-hour passes.

"That was just a general estimate," Maj. Jesse Siegal, another Army spokesman, said Thursday. "There was a lot of confusion yesterday."

Thirty-eight had returned by midafternoon, and "we expect all will be back this evening," he said. He would not provide a breakdown of how many of the 38 had been declared AWOL.

Whipple said another large group had been planning to leave, and had chartered buses to take them to Shreveport, La., but "we canceled their travel yesterday." He did not elaborate.

Whipple said 22 guardsmen were questioned and three were detained. He declined to give further details.

The guardsmen had complained of mistreatment, grueling training, canceled leave and low morale.

"I was disappointed these soldiers sought to solve this problem in this manner," said Whipple, who commands the brigade that traces its roots back to the Civil War.

In New Orleans, Maj. Gen. Ansel Stroud, head of the Louisiana National Guard, said top Army officials were upset by the incident. "You've got a platoon of four-star generals concerned," he said.

Whipple promised "senior grade" officials would investigate the guardsmen's complaints, but generally dismissed their claims of mistreatment and racism.

"The training is very intensive, very difficult, physically demanding and stressful, but that's what combat is like," Whipple said.

Meanwhile, two of the returning guardsmen said they had accomplished what they set out to do: publicize their alleged mistreatment by the U.S. Army.

Sgt. Byron Lloyd and Pvt. Eric Hall came back after a nearly 13-hour bus ride from their homes in Shreveport. They said they had left Tuesday night without passes.

Take 6 has 'So Much 2 Say' to Tufts with All That Jazz

by GEOFF LEPPER
Daily Editorial Board

Following in the footsteps of jazz masters such as Wynton Marsalis, Dizzy Gillespie, and last year's star, Branford Marsalis, the world's most unusual "hip" band, Take 6, will grace the Tufts stage as the featured act in the 11th annual Tufts and All That Jazz series.

The series is part of a celebration of February, African American Month. According to Associate Dean of Undergraduate Education Elizabeth Toupin, who headed the search committee that picked Take 6, the All That Jazz performances are meant to promote and celebrate the African American contributions to our culture.

Take 6, not surprisingly, consists of six members. What is surprising is their music -- an a cappella mix of jazz, gospel, and pop that matured in their years at Oakwood College, a small Seventh-day Adventist school in Hunstville, Alabama.

The band was originally formed when quartet members Claude

McKnight III, Cedric Dent, Alvin "Vinnie" Chea, and David Thomas were honing their skills in a men's bathroom at Oakwood when Mark Kibble walked in and joined in with a fifth part. When Kibble brought on Mervyn Warren, the sextet was complete.

Despite their first name -- Alliance -- they were so impressive in a June 1987 audition for mostly gospel labels that Reprise Records (a subsidiary of the Warner Brothers conglomerate) signed them to a deal, leading to their debut LP, Take 6. The group gained instant critical acclaim, their album climbed the spiritual, inspirational, and jazz charts at the same time, and they ended their first year in the spotlight by taking home three Grammy Awards.

After taking a one-year hiatus, Take 6 recently finished their second album, So Much 2 Say. The band is currently finishing up the Japanese leg of their tour backing this LP. They'll be in Los Angeles for the Feb. 20 Grammy Award ceremony, then will fly to Boston for their Cohen Auditorium appearance.

Seating for the concert, unlike some previous years of All That Jazz, will be completely reserved. Tickets are $12 for members of the Tufts community, $15 for all others.

In conjunction with the Take 6 show, the Tufts Jazz Band will be appearing in Cohen on Friday, Feb. 22, at 8:00 p.m. Attendance costs you nothing but your time.

Cyrano de Bergerac *****

All great experiences in life motivate us to learn or to do things, and this great film is no exception. The film is based on Alexandre Dumas' novel about a man with a massive nose who falls in love with a beautiful woman but is too afraid to confront her. The dialogue is in the original French, with English subtitles. As you watch the movie, you want to learn French; then you can fully understand Dumas' novel in the its original language instead of spending your time reading the flawed English translation. Watching Gerard Depardieu on screen makes you want to learn to act, and his portrayal is so convincing that you might impersonate him on the way home and compose poems. The male part of the audience will be motivated to be as eloquent, romantic, bold, and altruistic as Cyrano is, hoping to be able to woo women and sweep them off their feet with the pen, sword, or speech. The female contingency, on the other hand, may be disillusioned with their current boyfriend/lover/whatever, for he is undoubtedly inferior in one of the abovementioned qualities. Furthermore, he probably has a smaller appendage than the illustrious one of Cyrano de Bergerac.

Hamlet *****

Is Mel good or is he not? That is the question and "Yes" is my answer. As for Glenn Close, this film solidifies her position as one of the best actresses in the Meryl Streep league. Director Franco Zeffirelli regains his form in this adaptation of Shakespeare's six-hour play. This film is good enough to erase Zeffirelli's previous sham of a movie, Young Toscanini. The scenery in this film is impressive, and the dramatic effects are intensified by Ennio Morricone's score. There are few flaws, if any, in this movie, but keep in mind that two and one quarter hours of Shakespearean English is difficult to follow.

Alice *****

A what-if film in the Woody Allen comedic style, parodying a few stereotypes along the way. This film is slightly different from earlier Allen movies in that it delves a little further into the surreal and impossible in the same way that Garcia Marquez does in his literature. Mia Farrow, who physically and otherwise is the female equivalent of Allen's own characters in his other movies, portrays a confused adulterous woman married to a New York investment banker. Woody Allen movies are always amusing, and Alice is by no means an exception. I don't need to convince Woody Allen fans to see this film, but for those that are unfamiliar with him, this is a great way of starting.

Green Card *****

Gerard Depardieu, France's leading actor, and Andie MacDowell star in Peter Weir's latest film about two people brought together by a marriage of convenience. He wants a green card; she wants an apartment. In trying to repeat his success with Dead Poets Society, Weir creates a movie with an original story that lacks many of the usual ingredients of success in the film business: violence, opulence, non-stop action, and box-office-drawing stars. Depardieu charmingly enters the US film market with a very good performance in an admittedly easy role. MacDowell, although convincing, is upstaged by her male counterpart. This is a most enjoyable film full of comedy and romance that may not go down as a cinematic masterpiece but will provide you with 90 minutes of fun and laughter.

Didgeridoo, or did you shovel poop?

Dance to the sound of the didgeridoo. Graham Wiggins plays this aboriginal instrument, fashioned from a four-foot log hollowed out by termites, in a jazzy accessible manner. But then the strange object shrieks like some primordial animal: first bird, then bison, and sometimes insectoid. The didgeridoo's earthy hum is wild and natural; one wonders if it is really some long-lost Australian creature. Rather than a 4000-year-old instrument. Or maybe it just evolved that way.

And that's just one component of this mesmerizing instrumental album. As Wiggins spellcasts with his four-foot wand, guitarist Martin Cradick leads with a constantly changing acoustic strum. In the traditional "An Dro Nevez" he plays in a Celtic fashion, almost as if he were playing a bouzouki.

While Wiggins' didgeridoo subtly pants and flutters. On "Buenaventura" he seems to be strumming a banjo, at other times, some George Harrisonesque Middle Eastern thing. African drums and shakers render the entire concoction irresistibly danceable.

True to its name, the rhythmic ditty "Air Play" has already gained the attention of new age radio. A perfect opening track, "Air Play" builds its way up from the black soil before clicking together into an organic veldland themesong - something Kipling's Mowgli might have danced to when times were good.

If the didgeridoo is an animal, it's certainly an endangered one; Outback's innovations have given it another chance.

Poopshovel has returned!

Community 3's disciplined head-banging denizens have a new album on their way, I Came, I Saw, I Had a Hot Dog, and this advanced single gives us a pungent whiff of what's to come. "Outta My Hair" has plenty of relish, a number of headspinning guitar expositions, and enough other blasts and crashes to keep the heartrate dangerously high for several hours.

On the flip side, "Dragon Attack" opens like some glamour metal track, but the make-up starts dripping off in the heat, and hair-spray soon ignites, leaving a two-faced punk/metal ghoulie in its place. One wonders what Madison, Wisconsin did to these people.

The advance single "Outta My Hair," by headbangers Poopshovel, gives listeners a pungent whiff of their upcoming album I Came, I Saw, I Had a Hot Dog.

REPORT

Ladd said he has read an initial draft of the report and said he was curious to see what the recommendations the final report contains.

"I would rather comment on the final version when it comes to me, but I will say I gave DeVoto quite a few comments on the draft," Ladd said.

Provost Sol Gittleman said he has begun to read the report. He said that he will read the report "as a professor of Judaic studies interested in seeing more religion courses in different areas rather than as an administrator."

Howard Hunter, the chair and sole professor of the religious studies department, said yesterday he is "very eager" to see the recommendations in the report implemented.

"I hope and expect the alumni, faculty, and Administration, in a very collegial and positive manner, to make possible the enhancement and the increasing of faculty members in the department," Hunter said.

Hunter pointed to the Tufts veterinary school, the nutrition school and other specific University schools and departments as examples of "when there is an interest, there is the means. Nothing should be different with the development of a distinguished religious studies department at Tufts."

The study group consisted of approximately 25 Tufts faculty members who convened in the fall of 1989 after an invitation from Rotberg, who asked any faculty members interested in the future of religious studies at Tufts to form the group. Rotberg secured a grant of $25,000 from the Lilly Endowment to fund "outside consultants" to come to Tufts and meet with the group, according to DeVoto.

there is no denial of wrongdoing and [there is] acceptance of the proposed consequence by the accused," Reitman said.

Reitman said he didn't know if alcohol was involved in the incident, but he said that even if it had been, this wouldn't have been a mitigating factor in its resolution.

According to Tufts Pachyderm, second level disciplinary probation allows deferred suspension but indicates that any further disciplinary infractions will not be tolerated and will result in immediate suspension from the University. The deferred suspension may last for any specified period. A record of deferred suspension becomes part of a student's permanent record.

Reitman declined to name the two students involved, or the residence hall in which they lived.

Women's squash takes two matches, drops one

by TAB TENG
Daily Staff Writer

The women's squash team upped its record to 8-5 this week by beating both Bates and Bow-doin, by 9-0 and 7-2 scores, while losing to Harvard, 8-1. Yet, even with the loss, the team is looking strong and confident as they prepare to go to Yale to play in the Howe Cup tournament this weekend.

Last Saturday, Tufts was the favorite in their matches against Bates and Bowdoin. With the men's team also playing that day, the women's matches were scheduled to start early in morning.

Not used to playing matches so early in the day, Tufts got off to a slow start against Bates. The team was hot and cold in the first couple of games, as the players' minds were still not focused on the match. Some players appeared to need a little time and a little caffeine to get into the contest.

"The first game woke me up," said team captain Mellisa MacGillivray. "After that I was back on track."

After playing a couple of games the players did wake up, though, and like previously hibernating bears, they easily went on to beat back the Bobcats, 9-0. The women's team then got to rest as the men's team went on the courts to play against Bates.

When the awakened Jumbos returned to the courts again, they were facing Bowdoin. Bowdoin's record is 1-7 and they were beaten by Bates earlier in the season. Therefore, things were looking pretty bleak for the team from Brunswick.

This time the Jumbos were back in stride as they went on to beat Bowdoin, 7-2. "It wasn't pretty but we got the job done," commented Tufts coach Bill Summers.

Having a particularly great game was Louisa Terrell, playing against the Polar Bears top player, Catlin Hart. Losing the first game, 15-16, Terrell hung in and took the second game, 15-12. Down one game after losing her third game, 11-15, she managed to hold off Hart by winning the next two games by identical 15-9 scores.

Tufts' number three player, MacGillivray, and number four, Carolina Ramon, continued to play well in their second match of the day by beating their opponents in three straight games.

Abby Sloane had a tough loss in her second match, in which she had to play three tie-breakers. Having already played a four-game match earlier, she was faced with yet another four-gamer against Jennifer Bogue of Bowdoin. In the first game Sloane lost, 13-16, but she came back in the next one, winning 16-14. Losing the third game, 11-15, she made a good effort in the fourth, but came up just short, 16-18.

Again, Tufts' bottom half played well against both teams, winning all their matches in three games.

The Jumbos' next match came against the number one team in the country -- the school at the end of the #96 bus route, Harvard. Even though the Crimson was sending what Summers la-

Jumbos bounce Eastern Nazarene Milardo's 29 keys 73-44 win over Crusaders on the road

by ROB MIRMAN
Daily Staff Writer

The Jumbos garnered a fourth straight win against Eastern Nazarene on Tuesday night, outscoring the Crusaders, 73-44. This latest Jumbo onslaught brought their record to 13-4.

With the combination of the Jumbos' defense and the 29 points poured in by junior co-captain Tara Milardo, the Eastern Nazarene Crusaders never had a chance. The intense defensive effort is what has powered the Jumbos on their rebound from a mid-season slump.

The Jumbos opened the game with a quick run. Shooting guard Milardo established herself as an offensive force right away, hitting for several buckets in the opening minutes. Co-captain senior center Jennifer Foxson also gave the Jumbos early points from the middle, where she would finish with 14.

The Crusaders quickly found they would have problems on both ends of the court. Milardo said Tufts defensive strategy is to "concentrate on clogging the middle and [hinder] the outside shooter." Eastern Nazarene tried to circumvent the outside pressure and inside intimidation with quick passes to the baseline, hoping the quick switch would cause the Jumbos to blow an assignment, allowing an easy hoop.

On the other end, the Jumbos had no problems defending the Crusader technique. "Everybody was into it," said Milardo. With the Jumbos intensity up and the team concentrating, there was really no way for the Crusaders to catch them off-guard.

As many Jumbo opponents have been, the Crusaders were outmanned at both ends of the court. They proved to have little firepower from long range, and none of them could score from inside. Defensively, the Crusaders couldn't stop Milardo -- or, for that matter, just about anyone else. The Jumbos hit over half their shots against Eastern Nazarene. Facing a weak team, the Jumbos secured the victory early.

The real action was at the offensive end of the court, as Milardo was on her way to a career-high. "They were being kind of foolish. They left me open. I was just on fire."

With Milardo hitting from all over the court and the team delivering another great defensive performance, Tufts dominated the first half, 40-21.

While the other starters exited the game early in the second half, Milardo stayed in, aiming for her career best. The Jumbos ran plays to get the ball to their prolific scorer. Milardo finished the game with her best offensive performance at Tufts. Her scoring included four three-pointers and a perfect performance at the line. She was also credited with six assists.

During the second half the reserves got significant floortime, and they didn't disappoint. The lead opened even wider in the half, as the Jumbos finished up with the 29-point margin of victory. The reserves have been playing a lot lately.

The Jumbos have exploded out of a mid-season slump, winning their last four games by 21, 20, 29 and 29 points.

The Jumbos looked to extend their streak in a game against Pine Manor late last night. On Saturday the Jumbos head to Gordon college, and return home on Tuesday against Mount Holyoke.

Men's basketball looking forward to playoff berth in March

by PAUL HORAN
Senior Staff Writer

Well, it's early February, and that means college hoops teams have rounded the turn and entered the home stretch. Although the Jumbos might not be leading the pack, they appear to be right about where they want to be.

The Tufts '90-'91 edition is loaded with talent, particularly in the junior class, as four of the team's starters belong to the Class of 1992. This was supposed to be the year that the juniors established themselves, and the coaches and players agreed before the year that a 17-win season would do that. At 12-5 with seven games left, that goal is within reach.

The Jumbos' season can be divided into three parts. Before winter break Tufts could do no wrong, going 5-2, winning the Pepsi Invitational for the first time, and dropping their two losses by a combined five points to two top New England teams.

The key to the team's success was defense. Even though it has traditionally not been categorized as a Jumbo strength, coach Bob Sheldon stuck with a tough man-to-man defense, combined with occasional backcourt pressure. When things were going well, that mix produced easy transition baskets while holding opponents to a low shooting percentage.

Hurt by illness and the inactivity of winter break, Tufts began the second semester flat, losing three of their first four games and falling to 6-5. During this stretch the offense struggled at times and the Jumbos shot poorly.

However, the squad has rebounded from their poor play and has won six straight games, including Wednesday night's victory at Amherst. Now with seven left to play, the Jumbos have put themselves in position to reach the 17-win mark.

Without a doubt the juniors represent the strength of the team. Forward Larry Norman leads the team in scoring with 23.1 ppg (not including Wednesday night). He also leads the squad with 2.3 steals per game and is second in rebounding (6.5). His inside play has caused opposing defenses to trap down and open up the outside.

The bulk of the Jumbos' perimeter shooting has fallen into the hands of junior shooting guard Bill Slackman. He complements Norman's inside game with his three-point shooting (3.1 treys per game, 44.6 percent from outside the stripe). He is second on the team with 17.6 ppg and leads with 89 percent from the line.

Anthony Schiff, another starter, has provided for the highlight film his no-look passes, while sixth man Bruce Bligh comes off the bench to provide physical defense and strength off the glass.

But the real heart of the team is the co-captains, junior point guard Pat Skerry and senior center Dan Meserve. Skerry, a three-year starter, leads the team with 7.8 assists per game and chips in 11 ppg. But more significantly he sets the tone on both ends of the court, running the offense and playing hard-nosed defense. Without him on the court, the Jumbos struggle.

Meserve checks in with relatively modest numbers (5.6 ppg, 7.4 rpg). But his defensive presence inside is irreplaceable, and he provides leadership by example through his hard work and practice habits.

The squad is on the verge of notching the first post-season berth for third-year coach Bob Sheldon, and any post-season experience will help the team next year when the Class of '92 are seniors. The Jumbos will return everybody but graduating Meserve and Paul Chang.

Tufts should be something of a powerhouse next season. But that's not to say that the Jumbos are writing off this season. If they can win six or seven of their final games, they will be in the position of having a home-court post-season game and have the opportunity to make some noise in the tournament. The Class of '92 and Sheldon came to Cousens Gym together, and if they continue down their present path, they could be a top New England team for the rest of this season and then in '91-'92.

Harvard and Everest both insurmountable

beled a "watered-down team," the chances of Tufts winning a single match were still close to nil.

"Playing against Harvard is like trying to climb Mt. Everest with bathing suits," he said. "The players will be frustrated but not embarrassed. It will be a learning experience for us and we'll see how well we can play." And play well they did. But that wasn't enough as they were roundly defeated. However, despite losing their matches in three games, the Jumbos did play hard and they made the Harvard players work for their points.

The surprise of the day came when Liza Ngamtrakulpanit, playing the number nine position, upset Harvard's Sarah Willey. The match started off like all the other matches, with Willey winning the first game, this one a tiebreaker, 18-16. But Ngamtrakulpanit was able to come back in the next game, winning 15-12. On a roll, she took the third game by the identical score of 15-12.

By now, both players were running out of steam. Yet Ngamtrakulpanit played this fourth game as if it were her first, dominating Willey and winning 15-0.

"Some of us were totally destroyed today," commented Summers. "Harvard is just light years ahead of us, but the players enjoyed the game. Liza's win was excellent, especially since it came against a Harvard player."

The Jumbos head to Yale on Friday to play in the Howe Cup. The tournament is split up into three divisions. Tufts will probably be ranked first in the third division, which would make the Jumbos the thirteenth ranked team in the nation. The team will play five games in three days and they are expected to win the division.

He expressed some surprise yesterday that the search committee planned to make a decision by June, but declined to comment on whether the committee had contacted him recently.

Gittleman, 56, emphasized last month he is "not looking for a new job," adding that it would take "something remarkable" to persuade him to leave his position at Tufts.

"The presidency of Brandeis is remarkable, yes," Gittleman added.

In addition to Gittleman, Hess, and Pollack, the Globe's list included Stuart Eizenstat, a domestic policy advisor to former President Jimmy Carter and an active member of many Jewish organizations; former Bradford College President Arthur Levine, now the director of the Institute for Educational Management at Harvard's Graduate School of Education; and Long Island University President David J. Steinberg.

Tufts students voice objections to resolution at Medford Council meeting

intention of the resolution. Senior Brian Klein was upset by the connection between protesting and federal grants for education. He said he believes it is not appropriate to link the action of protesting with educational financial aid.

Sophomore Nick Jehlen said that the resolution's wording, calling for punishment of people illegally protesting the war yet saying nothing about people arrested in counter demonstrations, showed "severe bias."

"The resolution says that a person of one ideology should receive a harsher punishment than a person of an opposing ideology," Jehlen said.

President of the Council, Robert Pinto, interrupted Jehlen, saying that it is not in the "spirit" of the resolution to only attack one group.

"I don't understand what illegal protest is -- if you are caught trespassing, you are guilty of trespassing and not illegal protest," one councilor said.

Over the course of the evening, the debate became heated over topics of patriotism and freedom. One man supporting the resolution said that "Saddam [Hussein] holds a place in his heart for them [protesters]" and that he resented the message that protesters send to the troops.

Reverend Eugene Adams said that he was proud of the students that came to speak out against the resolution and cautioned them not to "blindly accept an order which [they] do not agree with."

As the discussion drew to a close, the city councilors thanked the concerned individuals for attending the meeting. At several points during the meeting, the councilors made note of various suggestions and statements by the participants in the open forum. However, the councilors did not say whether they would reconsider or reevaluate the resolution.

Giordano did not like the image the protestors presented to the troops in Saudi Arabia and the fact that taxpayers' money would go to pay for police presence at the various protests.
